SUNDAY SERVICES AT THE VARIOUS CHURCHES

Sunday was a great day for the revival in progress at the Christian church. Evangelist Trimble preached two excellent sermons: In the morning his theme was "The Distinctive Peculiarities of the Christian Church," and at night he preached a "Railroad Sermon," graphically describing the horrors of the "Road to Perdition" and the sublimities of the "Road to the city of God."

At these services the increasing interest and attention was notable. So far there have been eighteen additions to the church. In the forenoon the evangelist said in part:

"I propose to speak with the utmost candor today of the distinctive peculiarities of the Christian church. We have peculiarities. If we had none, or if those we have were not matters of deep conviction with us there could be found no adequate apology for our existence as a separate and distinct people."

"In the study of any movement it is of great importance to understand its purpose. The purpose of the originators of this movement was to restore to the world in faith, in spirit and in practice, the religion of the Christ and His apostles as found in the New Testament. Our peculiarities have grown out of this purpose."

"We are peculiar in our plea for Christian union. As we study the historical development of the movement, we find its protest against divisions, and its plea for Christian union was its first strongly marked feature."

"We are peculiar in reference to human names for the children of God and the body of Christ. We reject all human names. Our reasons are:—

"1 They perpetuate party strife. 2 Because it is impossible to find a human name which all Christians would consent to wear. 3 It is quite enough to be simply a Christian. 4 We reject them as dishonoring to Christ."

"We are peculiar in our rejection of human creeds and books of discipline, for the faith and government of the church. We believe the Bible alone is sufficient. We reject them because they make speculations and opinions matters of faith."

"We are peculiar in the position we give the Messiahship and divine Sonship of Jesus. With us it is not an article of faith, standing on the plane with others, but the article of faith in the Christian system. We sweep away all matters of speculation and place the fact of the Messiahship and the divine Sonship of Jesus in their, steady as the one thing to be believed."

By reason of the Zion association being in session a number of Baptist divines were in the city Sunday. The visiting ministers occupied the pulpits of the two Baptist churches and the C. P. church. At the First Baptist church, in the morning, Dr. I. N. Clark, of Kansas City, District Secretary of American Baptist Missionary Union, preached an able sermon on Missions. In the evening Rev. Washburn, Associational Missionary, preached a good sermon from the text, "Ye are the salt of the earth."

At the North Ada church in the forenoon Rev. Workman, of Columbus, Kans., filled the pulpit in the forenoon and Rev. Edwards at night.

Dr. Winn, of South McAlester, preached at the C. P. church in the morning and Rev. Thomas in the evening.

A great Sunday school mass meeting was held at the morning hour at the First church, under the management of Pastor T. B. Harrell and the various Sunday school superintendents of the association. At 2:30 a meeting was held for woman's work. All services were well attended and were highly edifying.

The association which convened last Friday will adjourn tonight with preaching services: Rev. J. C. Stalcup, Territory Superintendent of Missions, at the First church and Rev. G. W. Jefferson at North Ada church. Most of the time of Monday's session was devoted to receiving reports on the various branches of the associational work.

There were the usual services at the Methodist Church, morning, afternoon and night. In the morning Pastor Rippey preached a strong sermon on "The Home."

MAJORITY OF SEVEN FOR THE RETENTION OF "ADA"

Following is the total of votes cast on changing the name of Ada:

For Change of Name.....260
Against Change of Name.....267

VOTE FOR NEW NAMES.
Frisco City.....119
Winona City.....17
Winona.....2
Portland.....6
Grenada.....103
Ogeola.....1
Carlton.....1
Chickma.....1
Hamilton.....1
Mountolive.....1
Laurada.....1
Shamrock.....1

W. L. Byrd, W. W. Rader, A. M. Croxton, judges.

The final count in the News' Name contest was made Monday morning and shows out of a total vote of 527 a majority of seven for the present name, Ada. The voting began August 20 and closed last Saturday night after four weeks.

It will be observed there was comparatively small interest taken until the closing week. During the last week the advocates of a new name bestirred themselves and secured a majority of seven, but this was insufficient to overcome the lead of the old name. Another notable feature of the last count was the sudden popularity of "Grenada," which received 96 votes and finished a close second to "Frisco City." These two prove to be the decided favorites among the new names suggested.

The News presumes it is understood that the contest was initiated, not in the effort to dictate a change of names for the city, but simply to ascertain the sentiment of the people on a question agitated more or less for several years, and this much has been accomplished, despite the necessary looseness of the conduct of the balloting. It was hoped every person old enough to write his or her name would cast a ballot, and while only about one-sixth of the population voted, the percentage is sufficient to reflect measurably the sentiment of Ada citizens on the question of changing names. The result vindicates the old name. So long as such a large portion of the population is so clearly opposed to a change of names the matter should not be agitated. Make it unanimous and everybody holler for Ada.

The News wishes most heartily to thank the election judges, Gov. Byrd and Messrs. Croxton and Rader, for their services in canvassing the weekly vote.

FULL PROCEEDINGS OF COMMITTEE MEETING

The proceedings of the meeting, Saturday afternoon, of the Democratic Central Committee for the 87th delegate district were partially published in Saturday's News. Below is published in full the minutes of the meeting:

Pursuant to the call made by the chairman of the Democratic Central committee of the recording districts out of which the 87th constitutional delegate district was created, the members of the central committee convened in the Reed-Douglas building in Ada, I. T., on June 15th, 1906, at 2 p. m.

The meeting was called to order by J. T. Conn, chairman of the 16th district central committee. W. H. Ebey was elected president and Q. D. Gibbs, secretary. The chairman was authorized to appoint an executive or campaign committee of five members. The following proceedings were then had and adopted:

That a primary be held on the 2nd day of October, 1906. Polls to open at 7 o'clock a. m. and close at sun down. And the candidate receiving the highest number of the votes cast in the primary be declared the nominee. That on the 5th day of October, 1906, a convention be held at Ada, I. T., which shall declare the candidate receiving the highest number of votes cast in the primary the nominee. Said convention shall consist of five delegates from each voting precinct or box, and which delegates shall be elected at a mass meeting to be held at the voting place on the day of the primary at the hour of 3 o'clock p. m.

Each congressional township or fractional part thereof shall constitute an election precinct or box except that the township in which Ada is situated shall have four voting precincts or boxes.

The precinct and executive committeeman of each precinct shall have charge of the primary and mass meet ing in their respective precincts.

The system of organization recommended by the Democratic committee for Oklahoma and Indian Territory was adopted in the absence of specific action by the committee.

The chairman and executive committee were delegated full power to act in all matters wherein the committee would be called upon to act.

Meeting adjourned subject to call of chairman.

W. H. Ebey, Chairman.
Q. D. Gibbs, Secretary.

A Contemporary's Compliment.

The Pauls Valley Sentinel has taken unto itself a new name—The Pauls Valley Democrat. The proprietors, Messrs. Shaw and Parham have enlarged and strengthened the paper throughout, determined to make of it a mighty organ of Democracy. And such it is.

In the last issue of the Democrat The News is gratified to note the following high tribute to Carlton Weaver, who formerly lived in Pauls Valley:

"Carlton Weaver, the brilliant editor of the Ada Daily News, has acquiesced to the demands made upon him by a largely signed petition of the citizens of his district, and has announced his candidacy for the Democratic nomination for delegate to the constitutional convention."

"Mr. Weaver's announcement of principles is a clear cut, vigorous and able document, written in the fulness of democratic faith and breathing in every line determination to fittingly represent his constituency, if elected."

"When he first removed from Texas to Indian Territory Mr. Weaver lived a year in Pauls Valley."

"Mr. Weaver will be heard from when the Constitutional convention assembles at Guthrie next November."

OVERDRAFTS

It is becoming well known by business men that overdrafts, whether large or small, are not approved by the comptroller of the currency. The large central banks allow overdrafts only in a very small way, and this, it matters not how small, is not approved by the powers that be. This unbusinesslike habit of overdrafts grew out of advancing on moving products, such as cotton, grain and fat stock on the move. The overdraft system is wrong and the man whose account is always overdrawn is the man who spends more money than he makes and will finally have no bank account.

CARLTON WEAVER

Weaver for Delegate.

We are informed that Carlton Weaver, of the Ada News, is an aspirant to the honor of representing his people in the constitutional convention in November, 1906, and we believe Mr. Weaver is as well qualified to serve in this behalf as any man in the west.

Carlton Weaver is a young man of 25 years; is possessed of good natural judgment and executive ability, as is evinced by his success in journalism—the acknowledged arena of the literary world; has acquired university training, and his course in life has been signalized by commendable ambition, patriotism, philanthropy and public spiritedness; and above all, is a man of high moral integrity and self respect.

We have personally known Mr. Weaver something over four years, and our admiration of his noble qualities, moral and mental, is our best apology for stating that we shall be gratified when the fact of Mr. Weaver's election as delegate to the constitutional convention is consummated. —Guertie News

STOP FIGHTING.

Cubans Trying to Secure Peace Without Intervention.

Havana, Sept. 17.—The Government is making final strenuous efforts to restore peace in Cuba and thus avoid any kind of American intervention. The object of these endeavors, it is stated, is that it may be able to say by the time Secretary of War Taft and Acting Secretary of State Bacon arrive that peace has already been secured, and that therefore there is no need for the American Government's intervention either to restore peace or to insure permanent tranquility.

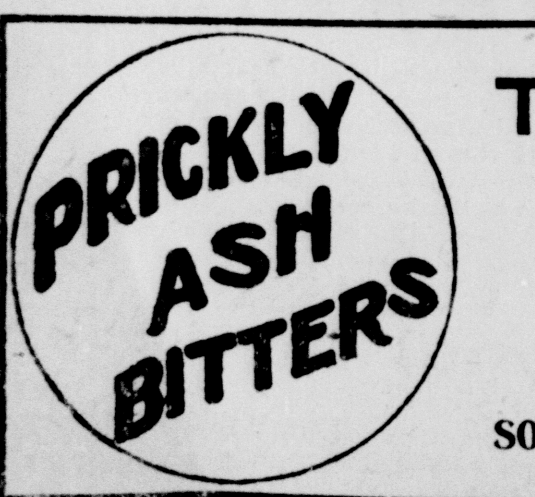

This is the latest phase of the rapidly changing situation. An extraordinary gazette was issued containing a decree signed by President Palma, on the recommendation of the Secretary of Public Works Montalvo, as follows: "All campaign operations are suspended and in consequence the Government forces will act only on the defensive throughout the Republic. The Secretary of the Interior will issue all necessary orders for the execution of this decree."

TOKENS SENT TO JOCKEYS.

Queer Tributes That Are Sent to the Riders of Race Horses.

One of the greatest of living jockeys has a most remarkable collection of tributes from admirers, unknown and otherwise. It contains, among other strange things, says the Minneapolis Journal, pawn tickets, writs and summonses contributed by unsuccessful backers of his mounts, talismans, sermons and tracts for his spiritual welfare, recipes for all kinds of ailments from coughs to a tendency to corpulence, forms for insuring against accidents, offers of marriage accompanied by bundles of photographs of would-be wives, welchers' tickets and a pair of worn-out boots with the legend: "All that is left of them after walking from York to London; backed all your mounts."

A few years ago, after his horse had lost an important race, a well-known turfman went up to the jockey and made him a formal and public presentation of a silver snuffbox, saying that if he would look inside he would see the kind of horse he ought to ride in the future. The jockey opened the box and found in it half a dozen fat snails.

It was the same satirical owner who on another occasion presented his jockey with a sumptuous casket, which on being opened disclosed a wooden spoon, and to a third jockey who had failed to win an important race he handed a pair of crutches bought from a beggar on the course.

NOT THE PROPER SPIRIT.

Customer in Jeweler's Was Not Endowed with the Christmas Feeling.

"It isn't the presents—it's the spirit," said January Jones, the millionaire miner of Goldfields, apropos of Christmas.

"I was in a bric-a-brac shop last January, and something that took place there showed me that with too many of us the Christmas spirit is not the proper one.

"I was talking to the proprietor. One of the clerks stepped up excitedly his eyes beaming with the hope of a big sale.

"Say, boss," he whispered, "give me the key to the safe. There's a lady wants a solitaire just like the one she has on. She thinks it will be fun to have two rings alike."

"The proprietor did not bring forth the key. He only shook his head and said sadly:

"Don't waste any time on her. The ring she has on is a Christmas present, and she only wants to find out what it cost."

Odd London Club.

The "Silence club's" membership is limited to ten, all of whom are season ticket-holders on a London suburban railway, and the subscription is sixpence weekly. It was established solely to enable the members to read the paper on the way to town. The revenue derived from subscriptions is handed to the guard every Saturday morning, and he reserves a carriage for the members.

KAISER A GREAT READER.

Keeps Two Secretaries Busy Marking Passages of Interest for Him.

The kaiser has two secretaries employed in little else than supplying his table with magazines, newspapers and books. Those passages are marked with green pencil to which his majesty's special attention is to be called. His taste is universal. He is a soldier, a landlord, a sailor, a huntsman and sportsman, an artist, a mechanic above all a politician, and on all these subjects books, etc., come pouring to his table, which he manages to run through in a fashion, and can assimilate their contents faster than most men. He is a wonderful newspaper reader. Especially does he pay attention to the articles in the foreign press on foreign politics. It is said he reads the foreign policy articles in English papers more than he does articles on the same subject in the German press. On his journeys, and these are frequent, the kaiser reads almost all day. Nearly every big station where the imperial train stops, he sends an attendant for all the papers he can lay his hands on; it does not matter what their contents be or how insignificant the papers.

American Exports to Orient.

There was a remarkable increase last year in American exports to China and Japan. In ten months the exports to China have been $50,000,000, compared with $20,000,000 in the previous year, and to Japan the total for the same time has jumped from $22,000,000 to $46,500,000. Our Pacific ferriage to those countries is direct and Europe cannot hope to compete with it in distance and cheapness.

Bond Election.

[Notice of Special Election.]

Notice is hereby given that a Special Election by the voters of the City of Ada, Indian Territory, who are qualified electors owning real or personal property subject to taxation in the said City of Ada, Indian Territory, has been called by the mayor and city council of Ada, Indian Territory, and will be held at the mayor's office in Ward No. 1, and at John Beard's building on Broadway in Ward No. 2, and at the United States commissioner's office in Ward No. 3, and at the John Barringer building on Townsend avenue between Main and Twelfth street in Ward No. 4, of the City of Ada, Indian Territory, on the 8th day of October, A. D. 1906, between the hours of 8 o'clock a. m. and sunset of same day, as follows:

To vote on the proposition of issuing Forty Thousand Dollars in bonds of said City of Ada, Indian Territory; the terms and conditions of the bond issue is more particularly described and set forth in the resolution of the city council of the City of Ada, Indian Territory, passed on the 3rd day of September, A. D. 1906, and herewith published at length as a part of this notice:

RESOLUTION. Concerning the issuing of bonds of the city of Ada, Indian Territory. Good cause appearing it is deemed advisable by the Mayor and City Council of the city of Ada, Indian Territory, to issue bonds for the following purpose, to-wit:

For the construction of additional waterworks; and, whereas under the provisions of Section 55 of Supplemental Agreement between the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nation and United States (32 Stat. 641); putting in force the "Laws in force in the organized Territories of the United States" (30 Stat. 252) and under the limitations of the General Bond Act approved May 19, 1902, (32 Stat. 200), the Mayor and City Council of said city are required first to submit the question of the issuance of said bonds to the qualified electors of said city who are owners of real estate or personal property, in said city, subject to taxation, to be by them voted upon.

Therefore, be it resolved by the City Council of the City of Ada, Indian Territory, that the Mayor of the said city of Ada, Indian Territory, submit the following proposition to the qualified electors owning real or personal property subject to taxation, in the said city of Ada, Indian Territory, to be by them voted upon, at an election to be held for that purpose, in Ada, Indian Territory, on the 8th day of October, A. D. 1906.

Shall the bonds of the city of Ada, Indian Territory, be issued for the following purpose and upon the following conditions, namely: in the sum of Forty Thousand Dollars, for the purpose of constructing additional waterworks for public and private use, in the said city of Ada, Indian Territory, said bonds hereinafter named to be issued in the principal sum of Forty Thousand Dollars and in denominations of One Thousand Dollars each, and to be numbered from thirty-one upwards, and to be known as Waterworks Bonds of the City of Ada, Indian Territory. The principal sum of said bonds to be paid in twenty years from the date of their issue in lawful money of the United States, to bear interest in like lawful money of the United States from the date of their issue, interest payable semi-annually at the rate of five per cent per annum; such bonds shall contain all necessary and usual provisions expressing the contract; shall be signed by the Mayor and countersigned by the Treasurer of the city of Ada, Indian Territory, who shall keep a proper record of such bonds; that none of said bonds shall be sold at less than their par value; that the 8th day of October, A. D. 1906, be and the same is, designated and set apart as the day upon which the question of the issuance of the bonds hereinafter specified shall be voted upon by the qualified electors of said city of Ada, Indian Territory, who are owners of real or personal property subject to taxation in said city of Ada, Indian Territory; that it is further resolved that a notice of the said election be signed by the Mayor and Recorder of the city of Ada, Indian Territory; in their official capacity specifying time and places of holding said election and set forth this resolution; said notice to be published in the Ada Weekly News, a newspaper of general circulation published in said city of Ada, Indian Territory, for thirty days prior to said 8th day of October, A. D. 1906.

And be it further Resolved: That the election be held on said 8th day of October, A. D. 1906, between the hours of eight o'clock a. m. and sunset of the same day, at such place in each ward as shall be designated by the notice of said election published by the said Mayor and Recorder of the said City of Ada, Indian Territory; and said election be conducted by election officers, consisting of judges and clerks appointed by one of the judges of the United States District court in the Indian Territory within and for the Southern district thereof.

And be it further Resolved: That the electors of said City of Ada, Indian Territory, owning either real or personal property subject to taxation in said City of Ada, Indian Territory, shall vote at said election by ballot.

I regret to advise friends who were invited to attend the Byrd-Carroll wedding Tuesday morning that, because of the recent illness of Miss Carroll and her continuing indisposition, I am compelled to insist that the guests be confined to the immediate members of the two families. A Serious Altercation.
In Lewis' cold drinks resort on Main late Saturday afternoon, trouble arose between Dick Stebbins, the railroad contractor, and John Cleveland, the drayman, resulting in serious injury to the latter.

Eye witnesses of the assault, who were inclined to be communicative, were hard to find, but it is said that Cleveland approached Stebbins about a bill, whereupon the latter got sore and used some vile epithets. When Cleveland objected to the language Stebbins struck him a terrific blow about the eye with a bottle, crushing the bone. Cleveland fell unconscious and was carried home where he still lies prostrate and in great pain. Stebbins was soon arrested by the U. S. authorities on a charge of assault with intent to kill and placed under a $500 bond. Later he was arrested by the city authorities on a charge of assault and placed under a $100 bond for his appearance. He will have his trial Friday.

While there is some contrariety of rumors touching the origin of the difficulty the consensus of opinion seems to be that it was brutal, unjustifiable assault, one not likely to be committed by a man in full possession of his faculties. Cleveland is a one-arm man and after the difficulty the officers found no weapon on his person.

Campbell and Weaver Speak.

Saturday night in response to the invitation of W. H. L. Campbell, a fair audience gathered at the Opera house where they heard him deliver an address in behalf of his candidacy for delegate to the Constitutional Convention. Judge Campbell devoted most of his speech to the proper method of the removal of restrictions and the prohibition question.

He argued that Congress should remove restrictions so there would be a limitation on the amount of land which could be sold to any one individual.

He next introduced for the first time the prohibition question into the delegate campaign.

Carlton Weaver, one of the candidates for delegate, who had accepted Mr. Campbell's invitation to be present followed Judge Campbell. He began by a discussion of his declaration of principles. Next he spoke fully and deliberately on the prohibition question. The News for want of space will not be able before the Tuesday issue to give the public the speeches in full of these two candidates.

ROLL OF EASTERN CHEROKEES.

Government Agent Will Prepare Roll For Distributing 5 Millions.

Muskogee, I. T., Sept. 17.—Some few days ago a committee representing the Keetoowah Society of the Cherokee Indians, composed of Richard M. Wolf, J. Frank Boudinot, Soggy Sanders and James Hildenbrandt, went to Washington for the purpose of inducing the Secretary of the Interior to send a man down to the Cherokee Nation to prepare a roll of the Eastern Cherokees who are entitled to participate in the $5,000,000 awarded them by the United States Court of Claims, instead of the Indians making application personally, setting out as a reason that many of the Indians would be deprived of getting the money they are justly entitled to on account of not knowing how to get the application blanks, which can only be secured at the Indian agency in this city, and again many of the full bloods have not the ready money to come to Muskogee.

J. Henry Dick of Tahlequah, who was in the city yesterday, received a message from Mr. Wolf, a member of the committee, who is also the head captain of the Keetoowah Society, to the effect that the secretary had agreed to furnish a man to prepare the roll and he was of the opinion that the work would begin at once.

CHAPMAN The Shoe Man.

HIS WIFE'S COUSIN

By A. B. FOX

"I'm very glad that I haven't a husband to worry about," said Anne Warner to her cousin, Amy. "You won't catch me entering the marriage state."

"But there are compensations," murmured Amy, tearfully.

"Perhaps," replied Anne, dryly, "if you call having babies, and drubbing all day in the kitchen, trying to get up a meal that will please his lordship, and, then, just at the last moment have a cool little note handed you, saying, 'Sorry, but can't come home to dinner. Detained by business?'"

Amy winced. "He always has a good excuse," she faltered.

Anne laughed scornfully. "Men always have. But just let me tell you, my dear cousin, it's all a lie. Why, last August, when Harry took me up on the roof garden of the Martine, what did I see? Dozens of well-dressed, good-looking men walking about with—well with—creatures. And the men seemed to be enjoying themselves immensely."

"But Jack wasn't there," put in Amy.

"These men have wives," went on Anne, mercilessly, "sitting the summer out on the piazza of some farmhouse in the country, doing fancy work and criticising any or all of the guests who may be so unfortunate as to be absent. When this most interesting subject is exhausted, one or another, poor innocents, will be sure to say, with a sympathetic sigh, 'Poor Jack, or Tom or Dick, cooped up all day in that hot office in town, and then to go home to an empty house, without wife or child to cheer him up. I do hope he may manage to get up this Saturday for a little relaxation.' But Jack doesn't come, this Saturday nor the next, and why? Because he is having the best kind of a time right here in town. Bah! It makes me sick."

Amy sighed, wiped her eyes once more, and tucked her handkerchief in the sleeve of her blouse.

"Well," she said, rising slowly, "we might as well eat our dinner. Oh, dear," with a regretful sigh, "and I made such a delicious chocolate pudding on purpose to please Jack. He's so fond of it."

For awhile, Anne sat in deep thought. Then she said, quite suddenly: "I've an idea, Amy. Shall I tell it you?" she paused and glanced a bit doubtfully at her cousin.

Amy nodded. "Go on," she said.

"Listen, then, Jack consults his own pleasure in staying away from you. Now, suppose you take an outing yourself occasionally. Put on your most fetching gown, go somewhere and enjoy yourself. I will look after Anne," Anne was Amy's only child, and Anne Warner's namesake.

"How could I enjoy myself without Jack," replied Amy, with a reproachful glance at her cousin. "Besides, what would he do if he should come home and not find me?"

"I'll wager he will manage to make himself comfortable," said Anne. "Besides, I will do my utmost to make things agreeable for his lordship. I fancy I've not lost quite all my powers of attraction yet," and Anne glanced complacently into the little mirror over the fireplace.

"Of course, I know that you can be, and are most charming, dear Anne," returned Amy, affectionately. "But then, you see, you are not his wife."

Anne laughed outright. "No, my dear innocent, I am not his wife, and that is just the reason why I can make it agreeable for him. When you return, you will see how devoted he will be to his own, own Amy."

Amy pressed Anne's hand gratefully for her seeming disinterested efforts for her welfare and happiness.

The next night, Jack Westcott was home promptly in time for dinner. "How would you like to go to the play to-night, Amy?" he said, in the midst of his enjoyment of a remarkably well-cooked ragout. "There's a capital thing going on at the Knickerbocker. Put on your prettiest gown and we will go."

Amy's face was radiant. She glanced triumphantly at her cousin. "How good of you, Jack. I shall be delighted. Anne, you will go?"

Her cousin shook her head in decided negative.

Amy hastened to her room to dress, and Jack settled himself with a cigar and the newspaper until she should be ready.

Anne sat down at the piano and struck a few chords. Then she began to sing softly. Jack laid down his paper to listen.

"Do sing again," he pleaded, when she had finished. But Anne was deaf to his entreaties, and taking a seat at the table, occupied herself with some fancy work.

When Mrs. Westcott came down, looking quietly pretty, she found her husband and Anne deep in conversation, which must have been most enjoyable, judging from their bright, animated faces.

Jack arose reluctantly. "I declare," said he, "it is so cosy and homelike here, it seems almost a shame to leave;" then, seeing his wife's face fall perceptibly, hastened to add, "although, no doubt, we will enjoy the play when we get there. Good-night, coz, a pleasant evening to you."

A slow smile stole over Anne Warner's face, as she murmured softly,

"He would have preferred remaining here with me."

For three days Jack Westcott had not been home to dinner, nor, in fact, until everyone had retired. Amy was in despair.

On the morning of the fourth day Amy could bear it no longer.

"Why don't you say something, Anne," she said, miserably, as they were sitting over a late breakfast.

"I told you what to do," replied her cousin. "Pack your grip, and go off for a few days. Don't say anything to him about it. You made a good many friends while at school. Can't you drop in on one of them just for a couple of days?"

Amy's troubled countenance cleared visibly. "Why, yes, there's Kitty Waring. She is always begging me to go to her."

"Good! You can start directly after lunch."

"What, to-day?" asked Amy, a surprise.

"Of course. The sooner the better. If he comes home to-night, which I doubt, I will see that he is made entirely comfortable."

Jack Westcott came home late that night, just as Anne was preparing to go to her room. She met him in the hall.

"Amy has gone away for a few days," she informed him. "She has been feeling just a bit blue lately, and I advised her to have a change. She told me to tell you," and without giving him a chance to reply, she hurried up to her room and closed the door.

The next morning, after breakfast, as Jack was leaving the room, Amy called after him: "By the way, Cousin Jack, kindly tell me if you are coming to dinner to-night."

Jack looked surprised, as he replied: "Why, I really can't say, Anne. Amy never wanted to know."

"But see, Anne does," retorted Anne, smiling a little. "It is a great waste of time and trouble to prepare an elaborate meal when you are not here to enjoy it."

Jack met her glance and something in her eyes impelled him to say, "I will come."

Anne, smiling quietly, summoned the cook, to whom she gave orders for a particularly good dinner.

True to his word, Jack made his appearance promptly at six. After dinner he betook himself to the drawing room, where, after seeing her little namesake safely in bed, Anne joined him. As she entered, he arose, went to the piano and opened it.

"Let us have some music," said he. "I used to have rather a decent voice, but I fancy it's grown a bit rusty from disuse."

So the two played and sang together until the clock struck 12. They both started in surprise.

"How the evening has flown," observed Jack.

"Music always makes the time pass quickly," replied Anne, indifferently.

In closing the piano, the side of the case accidentally struck Anne's hand. Jack caught up the injured member and examined it carefully. There was a small red streak across the dimpled, white fingers. "Poor little hand," he exclaimed, and he laid his lips softly on the mark.

"Expect me at six," said Jack the next morning, on leaving the breakfast room to go to the office. "I shall look forward to another pleasant evening."

He caught her eye as he spoke, and the red surged slowly over his face. Turning quickly, he hurried from the room. Anne's smile to the empty air held something of triumph in it.

"But tell me, how did Jack get on?"

"Very well, indeed. His appetite was exceedingly good, and I do not think he has lost an ounce of flesh."

"Don't tease me, Cousin Anne," pleaded Amy. "Do you really think he missed me?"

"He didn't say so. Ask him yourself when he comes home to-night to dinner."

"But will he come?" said Amy, doubtfully.

"He certainly will," assured Anne, with a peculiar smile.

At six o'clock Jack put in a prompt appearance. If disturbed at his wife's unexpected return, he made no sign, but greeted her most affectionately.

"Did you really miss me, Jack dear?" Amy asked, hanging over him adoringly.

Jack cast a quick glance at Anne, but she was busily looking over some new music.

"Of course, Amy. But, you know, you were a naughty girl to run away from your husband," replied Jack, jokingly.

Amy laughed and lovingly smoothed his hair. "It was a shabby trick to play you, wasn't it. I promised never to leave you again."

Mrs. Westcott was radiant all that afternoon, to Anne's surprise, Mrs. Westcott arrived.

"I couldn't stay away an hour long—evening, talking incessantly, and monopolizing Jack's attention. Anne sat at the piano, trying over her new music, striking chords softly and humming the airs to herself. It was not until Amy ran upstairs at a fancied call from Anne that the two had a word together.

Jack went over to the piano, leaned his arms on the case and looked down into Anne's face. "Our pleasant evenings are over," he said, regretfully.

She looked up and their eyes met. Yielding to the impelling passion in his, she arose and impulsively held out her hands. Seizing them he drew her within his arms, holding her as if he would never let her go. With his lips clinging to hers, for one delicious moment, the world was forgotten.

They started guiltily apart as Amy's step was heard coming down the stairs.

Notwithstanding Mr. Westcott now came home regularly at night, Amy was not exactly happy. She confided her feelings to her cousin.

"You are never satisfied, Amy," replied Anne, somewhat testily. "You fretted when he stayed away from you, and now that his evenings are always spent at home, still you are not happy."

"I suppose I am exacting," said Amy, humbly, "but he acts so strangely. I am really anxious about him. He will sit for hours, gazing at nothing, and the other day I was telling him something, and I know he did not hear a word I said. He just sat staring into space. Then last night, when you went out with Harry, he was as fidgety and absent-minded as possible. I offered to sing for him, but he said, no, he did not care for music, and only the other day I heard him tell you that he doted upon it. Do you think he can be ill or, perhaps he has business troubles? I think I will ask him, when he comes home to-night, what the trouble is. Do you think he will tell me, Anne? Or perhaps he might tell you. It would be almost the same thing. In the family, you know."

Thus appealed to, Anne turned from the window, but averted her face from her cousin's gaze, as she replied with an attempt at pleasantry: "Your better-half should tell his troubles to his wife, my dear, not to her cousin. She might not be interested."

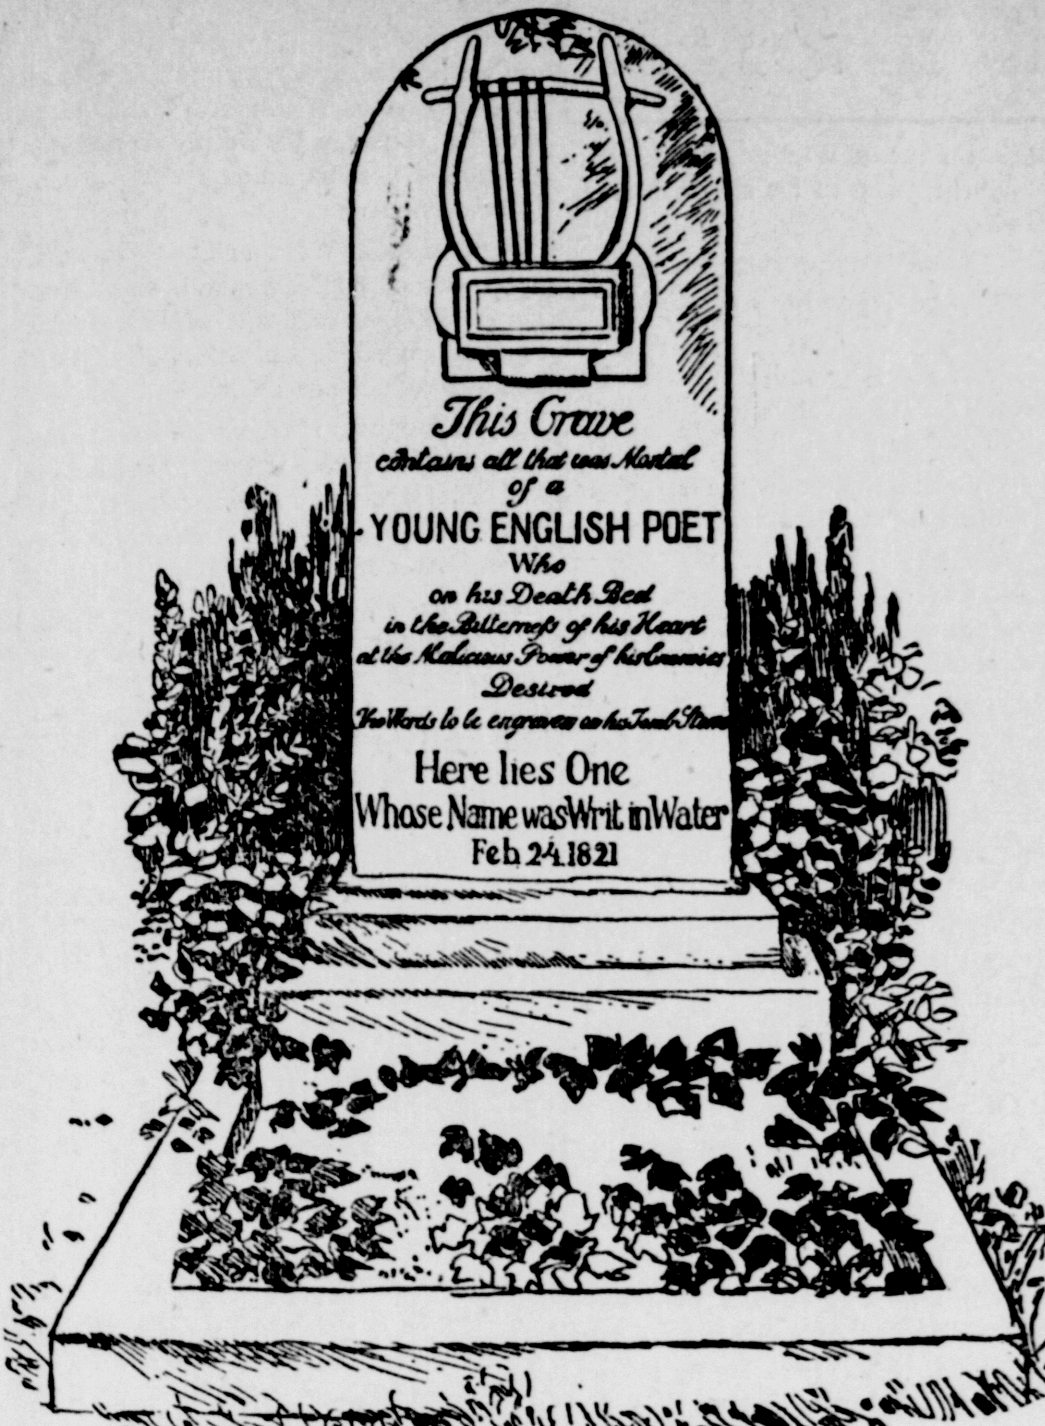

Amy elevated her eyebrows. "Whatever can all Anne?" she said to herself. "She acts as queerly as Jack."

That afternoon Mrs. Westcott invited Anne to go with her on a shopping expedition. Anne refused, giving some trivial excuse. So Amy went alone. As she entered the hall on her return, she espied a folded note lying on the table. It was addressed to herself, in her cousin's handwriting.

"Cousin Amy—I have run away with your husband. I intended to do so from the first. You can never forgive, so forget. Anne."

The Gravestone of Keats

In the old Protestant cemetery at Rome the youthful poet was laid, the victim of the world's injustice. Recently the municipal authorities planned to cut a road through the cemetery, over the grave, but the project has been abandoned.

Milt Dayton's Return

By J. B. BUTLER

They stood in the orchard under the old trees they loved so well. The air was laden with the scent of the apple blossoms and the moonlight streamed down through the white-laden boughs, making the scene a veritable paradise. It was the old, old story being enacted over again for the millionth time. The man was going away to seek the laurel wreath and the gold—and the girl was to await his return and then crown his success with her heart and hand. And, as ever, the man, full of the excitement of the fray and eager to go and try his steel against the great world, was hopeful, and eager, and strong, while the girl, with only weary days of waiting and inaction before her, was heartsick and tearful.

They had been so much to each other since earliest youth that the parting wrenched her heartstrings. The parting was hard for him, too, for he loved her dearly, and on this last night the memories of the tender hours they had passed crowded upon them both. He held her tight while her girlish arms were strained about his neck and her sweet face, with the limpid eyes and the passionate lips, was lifted to his.

"Can't we be happier to stay right here, Milt?" she whispered between his kisses. "You can get that 40 acres from Simpson by paying a little down and we can work hard and save and pay up and get more land after awhile."

The man laughed lightly, and somewhat scornfully.

"What!" he cried. "And live and die in this commonplace place and life and forever to save and save and save—just 'raise more corn to feed more hogs to buy more land, to raise more corn to feed more hogs,' and so forth and so forth and so forth until they carry us to the cemetery; and all the time getting older and duller and more stupid. No, no, Sally, I'm going to aim higher. I've got the strength and health—and the brains, I reckon, and I'm going out to try for the big things. Somebody's going to get them, and I want to take a chance. And I'll win, Sally; I feel it in my bones; I'll win. And then I'll come back and lay it at your feet and you shall live like the lady you are, and I will live like a gentleman, and we both will get something out of life instead of being common drudges and clods all our lives."

The girl looked into the face of the young fellow, flushed with excitement, dominant with confidence, eyes sparkling with ambition and resolve, and she pressed him tighter as she said:

"Forgive me, Milt, forgive me; I am weak and selfish, I know. But I love you so, and I am so afraid something will happen to part us. I want you, Milt, more than I want riches or houses, or ease or success. I know I am wrong, but I am only a weak, inexperienced girl, you know. Go and do what you want to and remember always that my prayers are with you and that I am always here waiting for you—no matter what happens."

"You are the dearest and bravest girl in the world," he exclaimed, holding her close and smothering her with kisses, "and I will try to deserve you." Then he added: "But I must go. The train leaves at midnight."

The girl clung to him. "Remember, Milt, whatever happens, success or defeat, I am waiting for you."

"Success or defeat you are waiting for me, he whispered. "That is enough to inspire any man. But there can be no defeat. I will wrest success from the world if hard work and persistence can do it."

"Good-by."

"Good-by."

A long, straining embrace, a shower of burning kisses, responded to most eagerly, and they parted, the girl to go home and weep the night away, the man to sigh and forget and plunge into the new world opening before him.

Ah! what a world it was, with its opportunities, its vicissitudes, its temptations, its hopes and fears and triumphs and falls. The same old world Father Adam tried to conquer—and all other men since, with what success ye students may judge yourselves.

Milton Dayton had his full share of all the ups and downs. His sturdy Americanism, undiluted at first by the shallowness and cynicism of city life, gave him a strength which he knew not of and carried him past many barriers and many obstacles. On the other hand, his ardent nature, his guilelessness, his unpreparedness for contest with the unscrupulous worldlings of the city, led him into many humiliating defeats. And the sad part of it was that the lessons in worldliness which he learned lessened and weakened his great natural strength, because as he acquired worldly wisdom his ideals faded and his sturdy principles relaxed.

And so, although he had successes, he also had failures, and after five strenuous years he was forced to admit to himself that he was no nearer the goal of ambition than he was on the night he left Sally under the apple blossoms. Nay, not so near, for his ideals were shattered, his purpose weakened, his character sullied, and his hopes and ambitions perverted.

All this time he had been corresponding with the dear girl back at Weldon's Corners, and this correspondence had been the principal chain which had held him to his old scheme of life. One morning, as he was trying to recover his nerve after a debauch during which, besides shattering his nerves he had lost his position and spent all his money, his mind turned to the picture of the sweet girl under the apple trees with the fragrance of the blossoms all about.

"Fool! fool!" he cried bitterly to himself. "I have thrown away the substance for the shadow. I am more than a fool. I am a cur. I have kept her waiting while I have dallied away my time and talents."

Then he made a mighty resolve, and he wrote her in remorse and humility and contrition, telling her the whole truth—or as much of it as any man ever tells any woman—releasing her from her pledges and announcing that he started for South Africa on the following day to lose himself in the diamond fields—to win like a lion or lose like a jackall.

Five years later a gaunt, disheveled man stood on the dock in New York, wearing in his face an expression half way between happiness and desperation. Milton Dayton could not keep down the exultation he felt at breathing again the air of his native land, after five years of hardships and failure and disappointment in South Africa. On the other hand, he faced here the same problems he had faced in South Africa, and before he went there. His scanty store of money would last but a few weeks. He was over 30, had made a failure everywhere, was more or less broken in health and strength and wholly dispirited. To him came all the dreams and aspirations and confidence of his lost youth, and he cried aloud in bitterness. With all his strength and purpose—aye, and talent, for he had had talent, so everybody said—here he was, stranded in his early thirties—discouraged, broken and a quitter.

Then, like a mirage, came to him the scene in the old orchard ten years before. The smutty freight houses and the swearing roustabouts and the chugging tugs faded from his sight and hearing, and his nostrils were filled with the fragrance of apple blossoms, while, by the moonlight through the trees, he could see again the sweet face of his sweetheart with her fresh red lips upturned to his.

And in his ears, of a sudden, rang the words:

"Remember, Milt, whatever happens, success or defeat, I am waiting for you."

In a flash it came to him that he had missed the best goods the gods had offered him—that he had passed by the one great unselfish, loyal, devoted love life had held or could hold for him.

He groaned aloud in anguish.

Through the fog of the Hudson came again, in tones as clear as a bell, the words:

"Whatever happens, success or defeat, I am waiting for you."

"Success or defeat—aye, that's the rub. Defeat—bitter, bitter defeat," cried Milton, striking himself in the face mirthlessly time and again. "And I went out so cock sure of success. And I broke my life, and hers, with my accursed folly."

Presently he went and sat down on a box. His old clearness of thought came back to him. Still in his ears rang the words: "Whatever happens, success or defeat, I am waiting for you." To go back to her—that would be his salvation. Her great love and her strengthening hand would revivify his courage and strength and give him new purpose.

He shrank back abashed. "No, no," he said, "it would be a coward's act to go to her in defeat and ruin—besides, I released her and deserted her five years ago—and God knows, she may be married."

"Remember, Milt, whatever happens, success or defeat, I am waiting for you," came out of the ether soft and clear, and he caught the very intoxication of her voice and the odor of the apple blossoms nearly suffocated him.

Slowly he arose and made his way to the depot.

They stood in the same orchard, under the same old trees, and the air was laden with apple blossoms as of yore. The same old moon also lightened the scene with its soft rays.

"Yes," he said, "I have come back—come back in defeat and humiliation. It's all my fault and I have nothing to ask of you—only I couldn't help coming to the old place once more—the only place where I ever have been happy."

The girl, now a woman in the very prime of glorious maturity, turned her calm eyes full on him.

"Do you remember what I said when you went away—Milt?"

He raised his eyes to hers and took a single step forward.

"Do I remember?" he said. "Whatever happens, success or defeat, I am waiting for you." Do I remember? But I forfeited all that five years ago."

"But I meant it—forever, Milt," and the calm eyes dropped and the face flushed rosy in the moonlight.

In an instant he had her in his arms and her arms were about his neck, and her face, upturned as it had been ten years ago, invited and received the same salute.

SUNDAY SERVICES AT THE VARIOUS CHURCHES

Sunday was a great day for the revival in progress at the Christian church. Evangelist Trimble preached two excellent sermons: In the morning his theme was "The Distinctive Peculiarities of the Christian Church," and at night he preached a "Railroad Sermon," graphically describing the horrors of the "Road to Perdition" and the sublimities of the "Road to the city of God."

At these services the increasing interest and attention was notable. So far there have been eighteen additions to the church. In the forenoon the evangelist said in part:

"I propose to speak with the utmost candor today of the distinctive peculiarities of the Christian church. We have peculiarities. If we had none, or if those we have were not matters of deep conviction with us there could be found no adequate apology for our existence as a separate and distinct people."

"In the study of any movement it is of great importance to understand its purpose. The purpose of the originators of this movement was to restore to the world in faith, in spirit and in practice, the religion of the Christ and His apostles as found in the New Testament. Our peculiarities have grown out of this purpose."

"We are peculiar in our plea for Christian union. As we study the historical development of the movement, we find its protest against divisions, and its plea for Christian union was its first strongly marked feature."

"We are peculiar in reference to human names for the children of God and the body of Christ. We reject all human names. Our reasons are:—

"1 They perpetuate party strife. 2 Because it is impossible to find a human name which all Christians would consent to wear. 3 It is quite enough to be simply a Christian. 4 We reject them as dishonoring to Christ."

"We are peculiar in our rejection of human creeds and books of discipline, for the faith and government of the church. We believe the Bible alone is sufficient. We reject them because they make speculations and opinions matters of faith."

"We are peculiar in the position we give the Messiahship and divine Sonship of Jesus. With us it is not an article of faith, standing on the plane with others, but the article of faith in the Christian system. We sweep away all matters of speculation and place the fact of the Messiahship and the divine Sonship of Jesus in their stead as the one thing to be believed."

By reason of the Zion association being in session a number of Baptist divines were in the city Sunday. The visiting ministers occupied the pulpits of the two Baptist churches and the C. P. church. At the First Baptist church, in the morning, Dr. I. N. Clark, of Kansas City, District Secretary of American Baptist Missionary Union, preached an able sermon on Missions. In the evening Rev. Washburn, Association Missionary, preached a good sermon from the text, "Ye are the salt of the earth."

At the North Ada church in the forenoon Rev. Workman, of Columbus, Kans., filled the pulpit in the forenoon and Rev. Edwards at night.

Dr. Winn, of South McAlester, preached at the C. P. church in the morning and Rev. Thomas in the evening.

A great Sunday school mass meeting was held at the morning hour at the First church, under the management of Pastor T. B. Harrell and the various Sunday school superintendents of the association. At 2:30 a meeting was held for woman's work. All services were well attended and were highly edifying.

The association which convened last Friday will adjourn tonight with preaching services: Rev. J. C. Stalcup, Territory Superintendent of Missions, at the First church and Rev. G. W. Jefferson at North Ada church. Most of the time of Monday's session was devoted to receiving reports on the various branches of the associational work.

There were the usual services at the Methodist Church, morning, afternoon and night. In the morning Pastor Rippey preached a strong sermon on "The Home."

MAJORITY OF SEVEN FOR THE RETENTION OF "ADA"

Following is the total of votes cast on changing the name of Ada:

For Change of Name 260
Against Change of Name 267

VOTE FOR NEW NAMES.

Frisco City 119
Winona City 17
Winona 2
Portland 8
Grenada 103
Ocala 1
Carlton 1
Chickma 1
Hamilton 1
Mounolive 1
Laurada 1
Shamrock 1

W. L. Byrd, W. W. Rader, A. M. Croxton, judges.

The final count in the News' Name contest was made Monday morning and shows out of a total vote of 527 a majority of seven for the present name, Ada. The voting began August 20 and closed last Saturday night after four weeks.

It will be observed there was comparatively small interest taken until the closing week. During the last week the advocates of a new name bestirred themselves and secured a majority of seven, but this was insufficient to overcome the lead of the old name. Another notable feature of the last count was the sudden popularity of "Grenada," which received 96 votes and finished a close second to "Frisco City." These two prove to be the decided favorites among the new names suggested.

The News presumes it is understood that the contest was initiated, not in the effort to dictate a change of names for the city, but simply to ascertain the sentiment of the people on a question agitated more or less for several years, and this much has been accomplished, despite the necessary looseness of the conduct of the balloting. It was hoped every person old enough to write his or her name would cast a ballot, and while only about one-sixth of the population voted, the percentage is sufficient to reflect measurably the sentiment of Ada citizens on the question of changing names. The result vindicates the old name. So long as such a large portion of the population is so clearly opposed to a change of names the matter should not be agitated. Make it unanimous and everybody holler for Ada.

The News wishes most heartily to thank the election judges, Gov. Byrd and Messrs. Croxton and Rader, for their services in canvassing the weekly vote.

FULL PROCEEDINGS OF COMMITTEE MEETING

The proceedings of the meeting, Saturday afternoon, of the Democratic Central Committee for the 87th delegate district were partially published in Saturday's News. Below is published in full the minutes of the meeting:

Pursuant to the call made by the chairman of the Democratic Central committee of the recording districts out of which the 87th constitutional delegate district was created, the members of the central committee convened in the Reed-Douglas building in Ada, I. T., on June 15th, 1906, at 2 p. m.

The meeting was called to order by J. T. Conn, chairman of the 16th district central committee. W. H. Ebey was elected president and Q. D. Gibbs, secretary. The chairman was authorized to appoint an executive or campaign committee of five members. The following proceedings were then had and adopted:

That a primary be held on the 2nd day of October, 1906. Polls to open at 7 o'clock a. m. and close at sun down. And the candidate receiving the highest number of the votes cast in the primary be declared the nominee. That on the 5th day of October, 1906, a convention be held at Ada, I. T., which shall declare the candidate receiving the highest number of votes cast in the primary the nominee. Said convention shall consist of five delegates from each voting precinct or box, and which delegates shall be elected at a mass meeting to be held at the voting place on the day of the primary at the hour of 3 o'clock p. m.

Each congressional township or fractional part thereof shall constitute an election precinct or box except that the township in which Ada is situated shall have four voting precincts or boxes.

The precinct and executive committee of each precinct shall have charge of the primary and mass meet ing in their respective precincts.

The system of organization recommended by the Democratic committee for Oklahoma and Indian Territory was adopted in the absence of specific action by the committee.

The chairman and executive committee were delegated full power to act in all matters wherein the committee would be called upon to act.

Meeting adjourned subject to call of chairman.

W. H. Ebey, Chairman.
Q. D. Gibbs, Secretary.

A Contemporary's Compliment.

The Pauls Valley Sentinel has taken unto itself a new name—The Pauls Valley Democrat. The proprietors, Messrs. Shaw and Parham have enlarged and strengthened the paper throughout, determined to make of it a mighty organ of Democracy. And such it is.

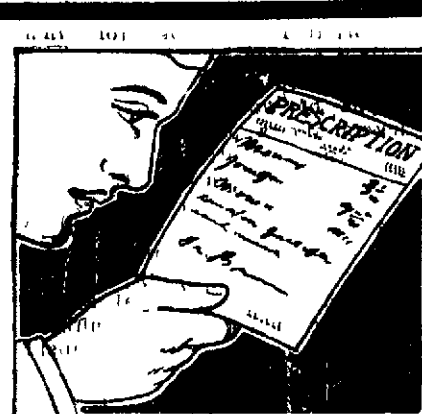

In the last issue of the Democrat The News is gratified to note the following high tribute to Carlton Weaver, who formerly lived in Pauls Valley:

"Carlton Weaver, the brilliant editor of the Ada Daily News, has acquiesced to the demands made upon him by a largely signed petition of the citizens of his district, and has announced his candidacy for the Democratic nomination for delegate to the constitutional convention."

"Mr. Weaver's announcement of principles is a clear cut, vigorous and able document, written in the fulness of democratic faith and breathing in every line determination to fittingly represent his constituency, if elected."

"When he first removed from Texas to Indian Territory Mr. Weaver lived a year in Pauls Valley."

"Mr. Weaver will be heard from when the Constitutional convention assembles at Guthrie next November."

OVERDRAFTS

It is becoming well known by business men that overdrafts, whether large or small, are not approved by the comptroller of the currency. The large central banks allow overdrafts only in a very small way, and this, it matters not how small, is not approved by the powers that be. This unbusinesslike habit of overdrafts grew out of advancing on moving products, such as cotton grain and fat stock on the move. The overdraft system is wrong and the man whose account is always overdrawn is the man who spends more money than he makes and will finally have no bank account.

CARLTON WEAVER

Weaver for Delegate.

We are informed that Carlton Weaver, of the Ada News, is an aspirant to the honor of representing his people in the constitutional convention in November, 1906, and we believe Mr. Weaver is as well qualified to serve in this behalf as any man in the west.

Carlton Weaver is a young man of 25 years; is possessed of good natural judgment and executive ability, as is evinced by his success in journalism—the acknowledged arena of the literary world; has acquired university training, and his course in life has been signalized by commendable ambition, patriotism, philanthropy and public spirit; and above all, is a man of high moral integrity and self-respect.

We have personally known Mr. Weaver something over four years, and our admiration of his noble qualities, moral and mental, is our best apology for stating that we shall be gratified when the fact of Mr. Weaver's selection as delegate to the constitutional convention is consummated. —Guertie News

STOP FIGHTING.

Cubans Trying to Secure Peace Without Intervention.

Havana, Sept. 17.—The Government is making final strenuous efforts to restore peace in Cuba and thus avoid any kind of American intervention. The object of these endeavors, it is stated, is that it may be able to say, by the time Secretary of War Taft and Acting Secretary of State Bacon arrive that peace has already been secured, and that therefore there is no need for the American Government's intervention either to restore peace or to insure permanent tranquility.

This is the latest phase of the rapidly changing situation. An extraordinary gazette was issued containing a decree signed by President Palma, on the recommendation of the Secretary of Public Works Montalvo, as follows: "All campaign operations are suspended and in consequence the Government forces will act only on the defensive throughout the Republic. The Secretary of the Interior will issue all necessary orders for the execution of this decree."

TOKENS SENT TO JOCKEYS.

Queer Tributes That Are Sent to the Riders of Race Horses.

One of the greatest of living jockeys has a most remarkable collection of tributes from admirers, unknown and otherwise. It contains, among other strange things, says the Minneapolis Journal, pawn tickets, writs and summonses contributed by unsuccessful backers of his mounts, tallies, sermons and tracts for his spiritual welfare, recipes for all kinds of ailments from coughs to a tendency to corpulence, forms for insuring against accidents, offers of marriage accompanied by bundles of photographs of would-be wives, welchers' tickets and a pair of worn-out boots with the legend: "All that is left of them after walking from York to London; backed all your mounts." A few years ago, after his horse had lost an important race, a well-known turfman went up to the jockey and made him a formal and public presentation of a silver snuffbox, saying that if he would look inside he would see the kind of horse he ought to ride in the future. The jockey opened the box and found in it half a dozen fat snails.

It was the same satirical owner who or another occasion presented his jockey with a sumptuous casket, which on being opened disclosed a wooden spoon, and to a third jockey who had failed to win an important race he handed a pair of crutches bought from a beggar on the course.

NOT THE PROPER SPIRIT.

Customer in Jeweler's Was Not Endowed with the Christmas Feeling.

"It isn't the presents—it's the spirit," said January Jones, the million aire miner of Goldfields, apropos of Christmas.

"I was in a bric-a-brac shop last January, and something that took place there showed me that with too many of us the Christmas spirit is not the proper one."

"I was talking to the proprietor. One of the clerks stepped up excitedly his eyes beaming with the hope of a big sale."

"Say, boss," he whispered, "give me the key to the safe. There's a lady wants a solitaire just like the one she has on. She thinks it will be fun to have two rings alike."

"The proprietor did not bring forth the key. He only shook his head and said sadly:

"Don't waste any time on her. The ring she has on is a Christmas present, and she only wants to find out what it cost."

KAISER A GREAT READER.

Keeps Two Secretaries Busy Marking Passages of Interest for Him.

The kaiser has two secretaries employed in little else than supplying his table with magazines, newspapers and books. Those passages are marked with green pencil to which his majesty's special attention is to be called. His taste is universal. He is a soldier, a landlord, a sailor, a huntsman and sportsman, an artist, a mechanic, a politician, and on all these subjects books, etc., come pouring to his table, which he manages to run through in a fashion, he can assimilate their contents faster than most men. He is a wonderful newspaper reader. Especially does he pay attention to the articles in the foreign press on foreign politics. It is said he reads the foreign policy articles in English papers more than he does articles on the same subject in the German press. On his journeys, and these are frequent, the kaiser reads almost all day. Nearly every big station where the imperial train stops, he sends an attendant for all the papers he can lay his hands on. It does not matter what their contents be or how insignificant the papers.

American Exports to Orient.

There was a remarkable increase last year in American exports to China and Japan. In ten months the exports to China have been $50,000,000 compared with $20,000,000 in the previous year, and to Japan the total for the same time has jumped from $22,000,000 to $46,500,000. Our Pacific freightage to those countries is direct and Europe cannot hope to compete with it in distance and cheapness.

[Notice of Special Election.] Notice is hereby given that a Special Election by the voters of the City of Ada, Indian Territory, who are qualified electors owning real or personal property subject to taxation in the said City of Ada, Indian Territory, has been called by the mayor and city council of Ada, Indian Territory, and will be held at the mayor's office in Ward No. 1, and at John Beard's building on Broadway in Ward No. 2, and at the United States commissioner's office in Ward No. 3, and at the John Barringer building on Townsend avenue between Main and Twelfth street in Ward No. 4, of the City of Ada, Indian Territory, on the 8th day of October, A. D. 1906, between the hours of 8 o'clock a. m. and sunset of same day, as follows:

To vote on the proposition of issuing Forty Thousand Dollars in bonds of said City of Ada, Indian Territory; the terms and conditions of the bond issue is more particularly described and set forth in the resolution of the city council of the City of Ada, Indian Territory, passed on the 3rd day of September, A. D. 1906, and herewith published at length as a part of this notice:

RESOLUTION. Concerning the issuing of bonds of the city of Ada, Indian Territory. Good cause appearing it is deemed advisable by the Mayor and City Council of the city of Ada, Indian Territory, to issue bonds for the following purpose, to-wit:

For the construction of additional waterworks; and, whereas under the provisions of Section 65 of Supplemental Agreement between the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nation and United States (32 Stat. 641); putting in force the "Laws in force in the organized Territories of the United States" (30 Stat. 252) and under the limitations of the General Bond Act approved May 19, 1902, (32 Stat. 200), the Mayor and City Council of said city are required first to submit the question of the issuance of said bonds to the qualified electors of said city who are owners of real estate or personal property, in said city, subject to taxation, to be by them voted upon.

Therefore, be it resolved by the City Council of the City of Ada, Indian Territory, that the Mayor of the said city of Ada, Indian Territory, submit the following proposition to the qualified electors owning real or personal property subject to taxation, in the said city of Ada, Indian Territory, to be by them voted upon, at an election to be held for that purpose, in Ada, Indian Territory, on the 8th day of October, A. D. 1906.

Shall the bonds of the city of Ada, Indian Territory, be issued for the following purpose and upon the following conditions, namely: in the sum of Forty Thousand Dollars, for the purpose of constructing additional waterworks for public and private use, in the said city of Ada, Indian Territory, said bonds hereinafter named to be issued in the principal sum of Forty Thousand Dollars and in denominations of One Thousand Dollars each, and to be numbered from thirty-one upwards, and to be known as Waterworks Bonds of the City of Ada, Indian Territory. The principal sum of said bonds to be paid in lawful money of the United States to bear interest in like lawful money of the United States from the date of their issue, interest payable semi-annually at the rate of five per cent per annum; such bonds shall contain all necessary and usual provisions expressing the contract shall be signed by the Mayor and countersigned by the Treasurer of the city of Ada, Indian Territory, who shall keep a proper record of such bonds, that none of said bonds shall be sold at less than their par value; that the 8th day of October, A. D. 1906, be and the same is, designated and set apart as the day upon which the question of the issuance of the bonds hereinafter specified shall be voted upon by the qualified electors of said city of Ada, Indian Territory, who are owners of real or personal property subject to taxation in said city of Ada, Indian Territory, that it is further resolved that a notice of the said election be signed by the Mayor and Recorder of the city of Ada, Indian Territory; in their official capacity specifying time and places of holding said election and set forth this resolution; said notice to be published in the Ada Weekly News, a newspaper of general circulation published in said city of Ada, Indian Territory, for thirty days prior to said 8th day of October, A. D. 1906.

And be it further Resolved: That the election be held on said 8th day of October, A. D. 1906, between the hours of eight o'clock a. m. and sunset of the same day, at such place in each ward as shall be designated by the notice of said election published by the said Mayor and Recorder of the said City of Ada, Indian Territory; and said election be conducted by election officers, consisting of judges and clerks appointed by one of the judges of the United States District court in the Indian Territory within and for the Southern district thereof.

And be it further Resolved: That the electors of said City of Ada, Indian Territory, owning either real or personal property subject to taxation in said City of Ada, Indian Territory, shall vote at said election by ballot,

A Serious Altercation.
In Lewis' cold drinks resort on Main late Saturday afternoon, trouble arose between Dick Stebbins, the railroad contractor, and John Cleveland, the drayman, resulting in serious injury to the latter.
Eye witnesses of the assault, who were inclined to be communicative, were hard to find, but it is said that Cleveland approached Stebbins about a bill, whereupon the latter got sore and used some vile epithets. When Cleveland objected to the language Stebbins struck him a terrific blow about the eye with a bottle, crushing the bone. Cleveland fell unconscious and was carried home where he still lies prostrate and in great pain. Stebbins was soon arrested by the U. S. authorities on a charge of assault with intent to kill and placed under a $500 bond. Later he was arrested by the city authorities on a charge of assault and placed under a $100 bond for his appearance. He will have his trial Friday.
While there is some contrariety of rumors touching the origin of the difficulty the consensus of opinion seems to be that it was brutal, unjustifiable assault, one not likely to be committed by a man in full possession of his faculties. Cleveland is a one-arm man and after the difficulty the officers found no weapon on his person.

Campbell and Weaver Speak.

Saturday night in response to the invitation of W. H. L. Campbell, a fair audience gathered at the Opera house where they heard him deliver an address in behalf of his candidacy for delegate to the Constitutional Convention. Judge Campbell devoted most of his speech to the proper method of the removal of restrictions and the prohibition question.
He argued that Congress should remove restrictions so there would be a limitation on the amount of land which could be sold to any one individual. He next introduced for the first time the prohibition question into the delegate campaign.
Carlton Weaver, one of the candidates for delegate, who had accepted Mr. Campbell's invitation to be present followed Judge Campbell. He began by a discussion of his declaration of principles. Next he spoke fully and deliberately on the prohibition question. The News for want of space will not be able before the Tuesday issue to give the public the speeches in full of these two candidates.

ROLL OF EASTERN CHEROKEES.

Government Agent Will Prepare Roll For Distributing 5 Millions.

Muskogee, I. T., Sept. 17.—Some few days ago a committee representing the Keetoowah Society of the Cherokee Indians, composed of Richard M. Wolf, J. Frank Boudinot, Soggy Sanders and James Hildenbrandt, went to Washington for the purpose of inducing the Secretary of the Interior to send a man down to the Cherokee Nation to prepare a roll of the Eastern Cherokees who are entitled to participate in the $5,000,000 awarded them by the United States Court of Claims, instead of the Indians making application personally, setting out as a reason that many of the Indians would be deprived of getting the money they are justly entitled to on account of not knowing how to get the application blanks, which can only be secured at the Indian agency in this city, and again many of the full bloods have not the ready money to come to Muskogee.
J. Henry Dick of Tahlequah, who was in the city yesterday, received a message from Mr. Wolf, a member of the committee, who is also the head captain of the Keetoowah Society, to the effect that the secretary had agreed to furnish a man to prepare the roll and he was of the opinion that the work would begin at once.

HIS WIFE'S COUSIN

By A. B. FOX

"I'm very glad that I haven't a husband to worry about," said Anne Warner to her cousin, Amy. "You won't catch me entering the marriage state."

"But there are compensations," murmured Amy, tearfully. "Perhaps," replied Anne, dryly. "If you call having babies, and drubbing all day in the kitchen, trying to get up a meal that will please his lordship, and then, just at the last moment have a cool little note handed you, saying, 'Sorry, but can't come home to dinner. Detained by business.'"

Amy winced. "He always has a good excuse," she faltered.

Anne laughed scornfully. "Men always have. But just let me tell you, my dear cousin, it's all a lie. Why, last August, when Harry took me up on the roof garden of the Martine, what did I see? Dozens of well-dressed, good-looking men walking about with—well with—creatures. And the men seemed to be enjoying themselves immensely."

"But Jack wasn't there," put in Amy.

"These men have wives," went on Anne, mercilessly, "sitting the summer out on the piazza of some farmhouse in the country, doing fancy work and criticizing any or all of the guests who may be so unfortunate as to be absent. When this most interesting subject is exhausted, one or another, poor innocents, will be sure to say, with a sympathetic sigh, 'Poor Jack, or Tom or Dick, in town, and then to go home to an empty house, without wife or child to cheer him up. I do hope he may manage to get up this Saturday for a little relaxation.' But Jack doesn't come, this Saturday, nor the next, and why? Because he is having the best kind of a time right here in town. Bah! It makes me sick."

Amy sighed, wiped her eyes once more, and flicked her handkerchief in the sleeve of her blouse.

"Well," she said, rising slowly, "we might as well eat our dinner. Oh, dear," with a regretful sigh, "and I made such a delicious chocolate pudding on purpose to please Jack. He's so fond of it."

For awhile, Anne sat in deep thought. Then she said, quite suddenly: "I've an idea, Amy. Shall I tell it you?" she paused and glanced a bit doubtfully at her cousin.

Amy nodded. "Go on," she said.

"Listen, then Jack consults his own pleasure in staying away from you. Now, suppose you take an outing yourself occasionally. Put on your most fetching gown, go somewhere and enjoy yourself. I will look after Anne."

Anne was Amy's only child, and Anne Warner's namesake.

"How could I enjoy myself without Jack?" replied Amy, with a reproachful glance at her cousin. "Besides, what would he do if he should come home and not find me?"

"I'll wager he will manage to make himself comfortable," said Anne. "Besides, I will do my utmost to make things agreeable for his lordship. I fancy I've not lost quite all my powers of attraction yet," and Anne glanced complacently into the little mirror over the fireplace.

"Of course, I know that you can be, and are most charming, dear Anne," returned Amy, affectionately. "But then, you see, you are not his wife."

Anne laughed outright. "No, my dear innocent, I am not his wife, and that is just the reason why I can make it agreeable for him. When you return, you will see how devoted he will be to his own, own Amy."

Amy pressed Anne's hand gratefully for her seeming disinterested efforts for her welfare and happiness.

The next night, Jack Westcott was home promptly in time for dinner. "How would you like to go to the play to-night, Amy?" he said, in the midst of his enjoyment of a remarkably well-cooked ragout. "There's a capital thing going on at the Knickerbocker. Put on your prettiest gown and we will go."

Amy's face was radiant. She glanced triumphantly at her cousin. "How good of you, Jack. I shall be delighted. Anne, you will go?"

Her cousin shook her head in decided negative.

Amy hastened to her room to dress, and Jack settled himself with a cigar and the newspaper until she should be ready.

Anne sat down at the piano and struck a few chords. Then she began to sing softly. Jack laid down his paper to listen.

"Do sing again," he pleaded, when she had finished. But Anne was deaf to his entreaties, and taking a seat at the table, occupied herself with some fancy work.

When Mrs. Westcott came down, looking quietly pretty, she found her husband and Anne deep in conversation, which must have been most enjoyable, judging from their bright, animated faces.

Jack arose reluctantly. "I declare," said he, "it is so cosy and homelike here, it seems almost a shame to leave," then, seeing his wife's face fall perceptibly, hastened to add, "although, no doubt, we will enjoy the play when we get there. Good-night, coz, a pleasant evening to you."

A slow smile stole over Anne Warner's face, as she murmured softly,

"He would have preferred remaining here with me."

For three days Jack Westcott had not been home to dinner, nor, in fact, until everyone had retired. Amy was in despair.

On the morning of the fourth day Amy could bear it no longer.

"Why don't you say something, Anne," she said, miserably, as they were sitting over a late breakfast.

"I told you what to do," replied her cousin. "Pack your grip, and go off for a few days. Don't say anything to him about it. You made a good many friends while at school. Can't you drop in on one of them just for a couple of days?"

Amy's troubled countenance cleared visibly. "Why, yes, there's Kitty Waring. She is always begging me to go to her."

"Good! You can start directly after lunch."

"What, to-day?" asked Amy, in surprise.

"Of course. The sooner the better. If he comes home to-night, which I doubt, I will see that he is made entirely comfortable."

Jack Westcott came home late that night, just as Anne was preparing to go to her room. She met him in the hall.

"Amy has gone away for a few days," she informed him. "She has been feeling just a bit blue lately, and I advised her to have a change. She told me to tell you," and without giving him a chance to reply, she hurried up to her room and closed the door.

The next morning, after breakfast, as Jack was leaving the room, Amy called after him. "By the way, Cousin Jack, kindly tell me if you are coming to dinner to-night."

Jack looked surprised, as he replied, "Why, I really can't say, Anne. Amy never wanted to know."

"But see, Anne does," retorted Anne, smiling a little. "It is a great waste of time and trouble to prepare an elaborate meal when you are not here to enjoy it."

Jack met her glance and something in her eyes impelled him to say, "I will come."

Anne, smiling quietly, summoned the cook, to whom she gave orders for a particularly good dinner.

True to his word, Jack made his appearance promptly at six. After dinner he betook himself to the drawing room, where, after seeing her little namesake safely in bed, Anne joined him. As she entered, he arose, went to the piano and opened it.

"Let us have some music," said he. "I used to have rather a decent voice, but I fancy it's grown a bit rusty from disuse."

So the two played and sang together until the clock struck 12. They both started in surprise.

"How the evening has flown," observed Jack.

"Music always makes the time pass quickly," replied Anne, indifferently. In closing the piano, the side of the case accidentally struck Anne's hand and caught up the injured finger, and examined it carefully. There was a small red streak across the dimpled, white fingers. "Poor little hand," he exclaimed, and he laid his lips softly on the mark.

"Expect me at six," said Jack the next morning, on leaving the breakfast room to go to the office. "I shall look forward to another pleasant evening." He caught her eye as he spoke, and the red surged slowly over his face. Turning quickly, he hurried from the room. Anne's smile to the empty air held something of triumph in it.

"But tell me, how did Jack get on?"

"Very well, indeed. His appetite was exceedingly good, and I do not think he has lost an ounce of flesh."

"Don't tease me, Cousin Anne," pleaded Amy. "Do you really think he missed me?"

"He didn't say so. Ask him yourself when he comes home to-night to dinner!"

"But will he come?" said Amy, doubtfully.

"He certainly will," assured Anne, with a peculiar smile.

At six o'clock Jack put in a prompt appearance. If disturbed at his wife's unexpected return, he made no sign, but greeted her most affectionately.

"Did you really miss me, Jack dear?" Amy asked, hanging over him adoringly.

Jack cast a quick glance at Anne, but she was busily looking over some new music.

"Of course, Amy. But, you know, you were a naughty girl to run away from your husband," replied Jack, jokingly.

Amy laughed and lovingly smoothed his hair. "It was a shabby trick to play you, wasn't it? I promised never to leave you again."

Mrs. Westcott was radiant all that afternoon, to Anne's surprise, Mrs. Westcott arrived.

"I couldn't stay away an hour long—evening, talking incessantly, and monopolizing Jack's attention. Anne sat at the piano, trying over her new music, striking chords softly and humming the airs to herself. It was not until Amy ran upstairs at a fancied call from Anne that the two had a word together.

Jack went over to the piano, leaned his arms on the case and looked down into Anne's face. "Our pleasant evenings are over," he said, regretfully.

She looked up and their eyes met. Yielding to the impelling passion in his, she arose and impulsively held out her hands. Seizing them he drew her within his arms, holding her as if he would never let her go. With his lips clinging to hers, for one delicious moment, the world was forgotten.

They started guiltily apart as Amy's step was heard coming down the stairs.

Notwithstanding Mr. Westcott now came home regularly at night, Amy was not exactly happy. She confided her feelings to her cousin.

"You are never satisfied, Amy," replied Anne, somewhat testily. "You fretted when he stayed away from you, and now that his evenings are always spent at home, still you are not happy."

"I suppose I am exacting," said Amy, humbly, "but he acts so strangely. I am really anxious about him. He will sit for hours, gazing at nothing, and the other day I was telling him something, and I know he did not hear a word I said. He just sat staring into space. Then last night, when you went out with Harry, he was as fidgety and absent-minded as possible. I offered to sing for him, but he said, no, he did not care for music, and only the other day I heard him tell you that he hated upon it. Do you think he can be ill or, perhaps he has business troubles? I think I will ask him, when he comes home to-night, what the trouble is. Do you think he will tell me, Anne? Or perhaps he might tell you it would be almost the same thing in the family, you know."

Thus appealed to, Anne turned from the window, but averted her face from her cousin's gaze, as she replied with an attempt at pleasantry: "Your better-half should tell his troubles to his wife, my dear, not to her cousin. She might not be interested."

Amy elevated her eyebrows. "Whatever can all Anne?" she said to herself. "She acts as queerly as Jack."

That afternoon Mrs. Westcott invited Anne to go with her on a shopping expedition. Anne refused, giving some trivial excuse. As she went alone, she espied a folded note lying on the table. It was addressed to herself, in her cousin's handwriting.

"Cousin Amy—I have run away with your husband. I intended to do so from the first. You can never forgive, so forget Anne."

Milt Dayton's Return

By J. B. BUTLER

They stood in the orchard under the old trees they loved so well. The air was laden with the scent of the apple blossoms and the moonlight streamed down through the white-laden boughs, making the scene a veritable paradise. It was the old, old story being enacted over again for the millionth time. The man was going away to seek the laurel wreath and the gold—and the girl was to await his return and then crown his success with her heart and hand. And, as ever, the man, full of the excitement of the fray and eager to go and try his steel against the great world, was hopeful, and eager, and strong, while the girl, with only weary days of waiting and inaction before her, was heartsick and tearful.

They had been so much to each other since earliest youth that the parting wrenched her heartstrings. The parting was hard for him, too, for he loved her dearly, and on this last night the memories of the tender hours they had passed crowded upon them both. He held her tight while her girlish arms were strained about his neck and her sweet face, with the limpid eyes and the passionate lips, was lifted to his.

"Can't we be happier to stay right here, Milt?" she whispered between his kisses. "You can get that 40 acres from Simpson by paying a little down and we can work hard and save and pay up and get more land after awhile."

The man laughed lightly, and somewhat scornfully.

"What!" he cried. "And live and die in this commonplace place and life and forever to save and save and save—just raise more corn to feed more hogs to buy more land, to raise more corn to feed more hogs, and so forth and so forth and so forth until they carry us to the cemetery; and all the time getting older and duller and more stupid. No, no, Sally, I'm going to aim higher. I've got the strength and health—and the brains, I reckon, and I'm going out to try for the big things. Somebody's going to get them, and I want to take a chance. And I'll win, Sally; I feel it in my bones; I'll win. And then I'll come back and lay it out at your feet and you shall live like the lady you are, and I will live like a gentleman, and we both will get something out of life instead of being common drudges and clods all our lives."

The girl looked into the face of the young fellow, flushed with excitement, dominant with confidence, eyes sparkling with ambition and resolve, and she pressed him tighter as she said:

"Forgive me, Milt, forgive me; I am weak and selfish, I know. But I love you so, and I am so afraid something will happen to part us. I want you, Milt, more than I want riches or houses, or ease or success. I know I am wrong, but I am only a weak, inexperienced girl, you know. Go and do what you want to and remember always that my prayers are with you and that I am always here waiting for you—no matter what happens."

"You are the dearest and bravest girl in the world," he exclaimed, holding her close and smothering her with kisses, "and I will try to deserve you." Then he added: "But I must go. The train leaves at midnight."

The girl clung to him. "Remember, Milt, whatever happens, success or defeat, I am waiting for you." "Success or defeat you are waiting for me," he whispered. "That is enough to inspire any man. But there can be no defeat. I will wrest success from the world if hard work and persistence can do it."

"Good-by."

"Good-by."

A long, straining embrace, a shower of burning kisses, responded to most eagerly, and they parted, the girl to go home and weep the night away, the man to sigh and forget and plunge into the new world opening before him.

Ah! what a world it was, with its opportunities, its vicissitudes, its temptations, its hopes and fears and triumphs and falls. The same old world Father Adam tried to conquer—and all other men since, with what success ye students may judge yourselves.

Milton Dayton had his full share of all the ups and downs. His sturdy Americanism, undiluted at first by the shallowness and cynicism of city life, gave him a strength which he knew not of and carried him past many barriers and many obstacles. On the other hand, his ardent nature, his guilelessness, his unpreparedness for contest with the unscrupulous worldlings of the city, led him into many humiliating defeats. And the sad part of it was that the lessons in worldliness which he learned lessened and weakened his great natural strength, because as he acquired worldly wisdom his ideals faded and his sturdy principles relaxed.

And so, although he had successes, he also had failures, and after five strenuous years he was forced to admit to himself that he was no nearer the goal of ambition than he was on the night he left Sally under the apple blossoms. Nay, not so near, for his ideals were shattered, his purpose weakened, his character sullied, and his hopes and ambitions perverted.

All this time he had been corresponding with the dear girl back at Weldon's Corners, and this correspondence had been the principal chain which had held him to his old scheme of life. One morning, as he was trying to recover his nerve after a debauch during which, besides shattering his nerves he had lost his position and spent all his money, his mind turned to the picture of the sweet girl under the apple trees with the fragrance of the blossoms all about.

"Fool! fool!" he cried bitterly to himself. "I have thrown away the substance for the shadow. I am more than a fool. I am a cur. I have kept her waiting while I have dallied away my time and talents."

Then he made a mighty resolve, and he wrote her in remorse and humility and contrition, telling her the whole truth—or as much of it as any man ever tells any woman—releasing her from her pledges and announcing that he started for South Africa on the following day to lose himself in the diamond fields—to win like a lion or lose like a jackall.

Five years later a gaunt, disheveled man stood on the dock in New York, wearing in his face an expression half way between happiness and despair. Milton Dayton could not keep down the exultation he felt at breathing again the air of his native land, after five years of hardship and failure and disappointment in South Africa. On the other hand, he faced here the same problems he had faced in South Africa, and before he went there. His scanty store of money would last but a few weeks. He was over 30, had made a failure everywhere, was more or less broken in health and strength and wholly dispirited. To him came all the dreams and aspirations and confidence of his lost youth, and he cried aloud in bitterness. With all his strength and purpose—aye, and talent, for he had had talent, so everybody said—here he was, stranded in his early thirties—discouraged, broken and a quitter.

Then, like a mirage, came to him the scene in the old orchard ten years before. The smutty freight houses and the swearing roustabouts and the chugging tugs faded from his sight and hearing, and his postils were filled with the fragrance of apple blossoms, while, by the moonlight through the trees, he could see again the sweet face of his sweetheart with her fresh red lips upturned to his.

And in his ears, of a sudden, rang the words:

"Remember, Milt, whatever happens, success or defeat, I am waiting for you."

In a flash it came to him that he had missed the best goods the gods had offered him—that he had passed by the one great unselfish, loyal, devoted love life had held or could hold for him.

He groaned aloud in anguish.

Through the fog of the Hudson came again, in tones as clear as a bell, the words:

"Whatever happens, success or defeat, I am waiting for you."

"Success or defeat—aye, that's the rub. Defeat—bitter, bitter defeat," cried Milton, striking himself in the face mirthlessly time and again. "And I went out so cock sure of success. And I broke my life, and hers, with my accursed folly."

Presently he went and sat down on a box. His old clearness of thought came back to him. Still in his ears rang the words "Whatever happens, success or defeat, I am waiting for you." To go back to her—that would be his salvation. Her great love and her strengthening hand would revivify his courage and strength and give him new purpose.

He shrank back abashed. "No, no," he said. "It would be a coward's act to go to her in defeat and ruin—besides I released her and deserted her five years ago—and God knows, she may be married."

"Remember, Milt, whatever happens, success or defeat, I am waiting for you," came out of the ether soft and clear, and he caught the very intoxication of her voice and the odor of the apple blossoms nearly suffocated him.

Slowly he arose and made his way to the depot.

They stood in the same orchard, under the same old trees, and the air was laden with apple blossoms as of yore. The same old moon also lightened the scene with its soft rays.

"Yes," he said, "I have come back—come back in defeat and humiliation. It's all my fault and I have nothing to ask of you—only I couldn't help coming to the old place once more—the only place where I ever have been happy."

The girl, now a woman in the very prime of glorious maturity, turned her calm eyes full on his.

"Do you remember what I said when you went away—Milt?"

He raised his eyes to hers and took a single step forward.

"Do I remember?" he said. "Whatever happens, success or defeat, I am waiting for you." Do I remember? But I forfeited that that five years ago."

"But I meant it—forever, Milt," and the calm eyes dropped and the face flushed rosy in the moonlight.

In an instant he had her in his arms and her arms were about his neck, and her face, upturned as it had been ten years ago, invited and received the same salute.

SUNDAY SERVICES AT THE VARIOUS CHURCHES

Sunday was a great day for the revival in progress at the Christian church. Evangelist Trimble preached two excellent sermons: In the morning his theme was "The Distinctive Peculiarities of the Christian Church," and at night he preached a "Railroad Sermon," graphically describing the horrors of the "Road to Perdition" and the sublimities of the "Road to the city of God."

At these services the increasing interest and attention was notable. So far there have been eighteen additions to the church. In the forenoon the evangelist said in part:

"I propose to speak with the utmost candor today of the distinctive peculiarities of the Christian church. We have peculiarities. If we had none, or if those we have were not matters of deep conviction with us there could be found no adequate apology for our existence as a separate and distinct people.

"In the study of any movement it is of great importance to understand its purpose. The purpose of the originators of this movement was to restore to the world in faith, in spirit and in practice, the religion of the Christ and His apostles as found in the New Testament. Our peculiarities have grown out of this purpose.

"We are peculiar in our plea for Christian union. As we study the historical development of the movement, we find its protest against divisions, and its plea for Christian union was its first strongly marked feature.

"We are peculiar in reference to human names for the children of God and the body of Christ. We reject all human names. Our reasons are:—

"1 They perpetuate party strife. 2 Because it is impossible to find a human name which all Christians would consent to wear. 3 It is quite enough to be simply a Christian. 4 We reject them as dishonoring to Christ.

"We are peculiar in our rejection of human creeds and books of discipline, for the faith and government of the church. We believe the Bible alone is sufficient. We reject them because they make speculations and opinions matters of faith.

"We are peculiar in the position we give the Messiahship and divine Sonship of Jesus. With us it is not an article of faith, standing on the plane with others, but the article of faith in the Christian system. We sweep away all matters of speculation and place the fact of the Messiahship and the divine Sonship of Jesus in their, steady as the one thing to be believed."

By reason of the Zion association being in session a number of Baptist divines were in the city Sunday. The visiting ministers occupied the pulpits of the two Baptist churches and the C. P. church. At the First Baptist church, in the morning, Dr. I. N. Clark, of Kansas City, District Secretary of American Baptist Missionary Union, preached an able sermon on Missions. In the evening Rev. Washburn, Associational Missionary, preached a good sermon from the text, "Ye are the salt of the earth."

At the North Ada church in the forenoon Rev. Workman, of Columbus, Kans., filled the pulpit in the forenoon and Rev. Edwards at night.

Dr. Winn, of South McAlester, preached at the C. P. church in the morning and Rev. Thomas in the evening.

A great Sunday school mass meeting was held at the morning hour at the First church, under the management of Pastor T. B. Harrell and the various Sunday school superintendents of the association. At 2:30 a meeting was held for women's work. All services were well attended and were highly edifying.

The association which convened last Friday will adjourn tonight with preaching services: Rev. J. C. Stalcup, Territory Superintendent of Missions, at the First church and Rev. G. W. Jefferson at North Ada church. Most of the time of Monday's session was devoted to receiving reports on the various branches of the associational work.

There were the usual services at the Methodist Church, morning, afternoon and night. In the morning Pastor Rippey preached a strong sermon on "The Home."

MAJORITY OF SEVEN FOR THE RETENTION OF "ADA"

Following is the total of votes cast on changing the name of Ada:

For Change of Name	260
Against Change of Name	267
VOTE FOR NEW NAMES.
Frisco City	119
Winona City	17
Winona	2
Portland	6
Grenada	103
Ogeola	1
Carlton	1
Chickma	1
Hamilton	1
Mountolive	1
Laurada	1
Shamrock	1

W. L. Byrd, W. W. Rader, A. M. Croxton, judges. The final count in the News' Name contest was made Monday morning and shows out of a total vote of 527 a majority of seven for the present name, Ada. The voting began August 20 and closed last Saturday night after four weeks.

It will be observed there was comparatively small interest taken until the closing week. During the last week the advocates of a new name bestirred themselves and secured a majority of seven, but this was insufficient to overcome the lead of the old name. Another notable feature of the last count was the sudden popularity of "Grenada," which received 96 votes and finished a close second to "Frisco City." These two prove to be the decided favorites among the new names suggested.

The News presumes it is understood that the contest was initiated, not in the effort to dictate a change of names for the city, but simply to ascertain the sentiment of the people on a question agitated more or less for several years, and this much has been accomplished, despite the necessary looseness of the conduct of the balloting. It was hoped every person old enough to write his or her name would cast a ballot, and while only about one-sixth of the population voted, the percentage is sufficient to reflect measurably the sentiment of Ada citizens on the question of changing names. The result vindicates the old name. So long as such a large portion of the population is so clearly opposed to a change of names the matter should not be agitated. Make it unanimous and everybody holler for Ada.

The News wishes most heartily to thank the election judges, Gov. Byrd and Messrs. Croxton and Rader, for their services in canvassing the weekly vote.

FULL PROCEEDINGS OF COMMITTEE MEETING

The proceedings of the meeting, Saturday afternoon, of the Democratic Central Committee for the 87th delegate district were partially published in Saturday's News. Below is published in full the minutes of the meeting:

Pursuant to the call made by the chairman of the Democratic Central committee of the recording districts out of which the 87th constitutional delegate district was created, the members of the central committee convened in the Reed-Douglas building in Ada, I. T., on June 15th, 1906, at 2 p. m.

The meeting was called to order by J. T. Conn, chairman of the 16th district central committee. W. H. Ebey was elected president and Q. D. Gibbs, secretary. The chairman was authorized to appoint an executive or campaign committee of five members. The following proceedings were then had and adopted:

That a primary be held on the 2nd day of October, 1906. Polls to open at 7 o'clock a. m. and close at sun down. And the candidate receiving the highest number of the votes cast in the primary be declared the nominee. That on the 5th day of October, 1906, a convention be held at Ada, I. T., which shall declare the candidate receiving the highest number of votes cast in the primary the nominee. Said convention shall consist of five delegates from each voting precinct or box, and which delegates shall be elected at a mass meeting to be held at the voting place on the day of the primary at the hour of 3 o'clock p. m.

Each congressional township or fractional part thereof shall constitute an election precinct or box except that the township in which Ada is situated shall have four voting precincts or boxes.

The precinct and executive committee of each precinct shall have charge of the primary and mass meet ing in their respective precincts.

The system of organization recommended by the Democratic committee for Oklahoma and Indian Territory was adopted in the absence of specific action by the committee.

The chairman and executive committee were delegated full power to act in all matters wherein the committee would be called upon to act.

Meeting adjourned subject to call of chairman.

W. H. Ebey, Chairman.
Q. D. Gibbs, Secretary.

The Pauls Valley Sentinel has taken unto itself a new name—The Pauls Valley Democrat. The proprietors, Messrs. Shaw and Parham have enlarged and strengthened the paper throughout, determined to make of it a mighty organ of Democracy. And such it is.

In the last issue of the Democrat The News is gratified to note the following high tribute to Carlton Weaver, who formerly lived in Pauls Valley:

"Carlton Weaver, the brilliant editor of the Ada Daily News, has acquiesced to the demands made upon him by a largely signed petition of the citizens of his district, and has announced his candidacy for the Democratic nomination for delegate to the constitutional convention."

"Mr. Weaver's announcement of principles is a clear cut, vigorous and able document, written in the fulness of democratic faith and breathing in every line determination to fittingly represent his constituency, if elected."

"When he first removed from Texas to Indian Territory Mr. Weaver lived a year in Pauls Valley."

"Mr. Weaver will be heard from when the Constitutional convention assembles at Guthrie next November."

OVERDRAFTS

It is becoming well known by business men that overdrafts, whether large or small, are not approved by the comptroller of the currency. The large central banks allow overdrafts only in a very small way, and this, it matters not how small, is not approved by the powers that be. This unbusinesslike habit of overdrafts grew out of advancing on moving products, such as cotton, grain and fat stock on the move. The overdraft system is wrong and the man whose account is always overdrawn is the man who spends more money than he makes and will finally have no bank account.

Weaver for Delegate.

We are informed that Carlton Weaver, of the Ada News, is an aspirant to the honor of representing his people in the constitutional convention in November, 1906, and we believe Mr. Weaver is as well qualified to serve in this behalf as any man in the west.

Carlton Weaver is a young man of 25 years; is possessed of good natural judgment and executive ability, as is evinced by his success in journalism—the acknowledged arena of the literary world; has acquired university training, and his course in life has been signalized by commendable ambition, patriotism, philanthropy and public spirit; and above all is a man of high moral integrity and self-respect. We have personally known Mr. Weaver something over four years, and our admiration of his noble qualities, mental and moral, is our best apology for stating that we shall be gratified when the fact of Mr. Weaver's selection as delegate to the constitutional convention is consummated.—Guertie News

STOP FIGHTING.

Cubans Trying to Secure Peace Without Intervention.

Havana, Sept. 17.—The Government is making final strenuous efforts to restore peace in Cuba and thus avoid any kind of American intervention. The object of these endeavors, it is stated, is that it may be able to say by the time Secretary of War Taft and Acting Secretary of State Bacon arrive that peace has already been secured, and that therefore there is no need for the American Government's intervention either to restore peace or to insure permanent tranquility.

This is the latest phase of the rapidly changing situation. An extraordinary gazette was issued containing a decree signed by President Palma, on the recommendation of the Secretary of Public Works Montalvo, as follows: "All campaign operations are suspended and in consequence the Government forces will act only on the defensive throughout the Republic. The Secretary of the Interior will issue all necessary orders for the execution of this decree."

Better Than Any Other.

TOKENS SENT TO JOCKEYS.

Queer Tributes That Are Sent to the Riders of Race Horses.

One of the greatest of living jockeys has a most remarkable collection of tributes from admirers, unknown and otherwise. It contains, among other strange things, says the Minneapolis Journal, pawn tickets, writs and summonses contributed by unsuccessful backers of his mounts, tall-mans, sermons and tracts for his spiritual welfare, recipes for all kinds of ailments from coughs to a tendency to corpulence, forms for insuring against accidents, offers of marriage accompanied by bundles of photographs of would-be wives, welchers' tickets and a pair of worn-out boots with the legend: "All that is left of them after walking from York to London; backed all your mounts."

A few years ago, after his horse had lost an important race, a well-known turfman went up to the jockey and made him a formal and public presentation of a silver snuffbox, saying that if he would look inside he would see the kind of horse he ought to ride in the future. The jockey opened the box and found in it half a dozen fat snails.

It was the same satirical owner who or another occasion presented his jockey with a sumptuous casket, which on being opened disclosed a wooden spoon, and to a third jockey who had failed to win an important race he handed a pair of crutches bought from a beggar on the course.

NOT THE PROPER SPIRIT.

Customer in Jeweler's Was Not Endowed with the Christmas Feeling.

"It isn't the presents—it's the spirit," said January Jones, the million aire miner of Goldfields, apropos of Christmas.

"I was in a bric-a-brac shop last January, and something that took place there showed me that with many of us the Christmas spirit is not the proper one."

"I was talking to the proprietor. One of the clerks stepped up excitedly, his eyes beaming with the hope of a big sale."

"Say, boss," he whispered, "give me the key to the safe. There's a lady wants a solitaire just like the one she has on. She thinks it will be fun to have two rings alike."

"The proprietor did not bring forth the key. He only shook his head and said sadly:

"Don't waste any time on her. The ring she has on is a Christmas present, and she only wants to find out what it cost."

Old London Club.

The "Silence club's" membership is limited to ten, all of whom are season ticket-holders on a London suburban railway, and the subscription is sixpence weekly. It was established solely to enable the members to read the paper on the way to town. The revenue derived from subscriptions is handed to the guard every Saturday morning, and he reserves a carriage for the members.

KAISER A GREAT READER.

Keeps Two Secretaries Busy Marking Passages of Interest for Him.

The kaiser has two secretaries employed in little else than supplying his table with magazines, newspapers and books. Those passages are marked with green pencil to which his majesty's special attention is to be called. His taste is universal. He is a soldier, a landlord, a sailor, a huntsman and sportsman, an artist, a mechanic, a politician, and on all these subjects books, etc., come pouring to his table, which he manages to run through in a fashion, and can assimilate their contents faster than most men. He is a wonderful newspaper reader. Especially does he pay attention to the articles in the foreign press on foreign politics. It is said he reads the foreign policy articles in English papers more than he does articles on the same subject in the German press. On his journeys, and these are frequent, the kaiser reads almost all day. Nearly every big station where the imperial train stops, he sends an attendant for all the papers he can lay his hands on. It does not matter what their contents be or how insignificant the papers.

American Exports to Orient.

There was a remarkable increase last year in American exports to China and Japan. In ten months the exports to China have been $50,000,000, compared with $20,000,000 in the previous year, and to Japan the total for the same time has jumped from $22,000,000 to $46,500,000. Our Pacific ferriage to those countries is direct and Europe cannot hope to compete with it in distance and cheapness.

The Breath of Life

It's a significant fact that the strongest animal of its size, the gorilla, also has the largest lungs. Powerful lungs means powerful creatures. How to keep the breathing organs right should be man's chiefest study. Like thousands of others, Mrs. Ora A. Stephens, of Port Williams, O., has learned how to do this. She writes: "Three bottles of Dr. King's New Discovery stopped my cough of two years and cured me of what my friends thought consumption. O, it's grand for throat and lung troubles." Guaranteed by Dr. F. Z. Holley and G. M. Ramsey, druggists. Price 50c and $1.00. Trial bottle free.

Steals Fire from the Mind.

Malaria steals fire from the mind and vigor from the limbs unless you take Dr. Mendenhall's Chill and Fever Cure to give yourself new vim. Better than quinine and does not affect the head. Pleasant to take. If you do not like it better than any other Chill Tonic G. M. Ramsey, Druggist, will pay your money back.

Bond Election.

[Notice of Special Election.] Notice is hereby given that a Special Election by the voters of the City of Ada, Indian Territory, who are qualified electors owning real or personal property subject to taxation in the said City of Ada, Indian Territory, has been called by the mayor and city council of Ada, Indian Territory, and will be held at the mayor's office in Ward No. 1, and at John Beard's building on Broadway in Ward No. 2, and at the United States commissioner's office in Ward No. 3, and at the John Barringer building on Townsend avenue between Main and Twelfth street in Ward No. 4, of the City of Ada, Indian Territory, on the 8th day of October, A. D. 1906, between the hours of 8 o'clock a. m. and sunset of same day, as follows:

To vote on the proposition of issuing Forty Thousand Dollars in bonds of said City of Ada, Indian Territory; the terms and conditions of the bond issue is more particularly described and set forth in the resolution of the city council of the City of Ada, Indian Territory, passed on the 3rd day of September, A. D. 1906, and herewith published at length as a part of this notice:

RESOLUTION. Concerning the issuing of bonds of the city of Ada, Indian Territory. Good cause appearing it is deemed advisable by the Mayor and City Council of the city of Ada, Indian Territory, to issue bonds for the following purpose, to-wit:

For the construction of additional waterworks; and whereas under the provisions of Section 55 of Supplemental Agreement between the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nation and United States (32 Stat. 641); putting in force the "Laws in force in the organized Territories of the United States" (30 Stat. 252) and under the limitations of the General Bond Act approved May 19, 1902, (32 Stat. 200), the Mayor and City Council of said city are required first to submit the question of the issuance of said bonds to the qualified electors of said city who are owners of real estate or personal property, in said city, subject to taxation, to be by them voted upon.

Therefore, be it resolved by the City Council of the City of Ada, Indian Territory, that the Mayor of the said city of Ada, Indian Territory, submit the following proposition to the qualified electors owning real or personal property subject to taxation, in the said city of Ada, Indian Territory, to be by them voted upon, at an election to be held for that purpose, in Ada, Indian Territory, on the 8th day of October, A. D. 1906.

Shall the bonds of the city of Ada, Indian Territory, be issued for the following purpose and upon the following conditions, namely: in the sum of Forty Thousand Dollars, for the purpose of constructing additional waterworks for public and private use, in the said city of Ada, Indian Territory, said bonds hereinafter named to be issued in the principal sum of Forty Thousand Dollars and in denominations of One Thousand Dollars each, and to be numbered from thirty-one upwards, and to be known as Waterworks Bonds of the City of Ada, Indian Territory. The principal sum of said bonds, to be paid in twenty years from the date of their issue in lawful money of the United States to bear interest in like lawful money of the United States from the date of their issue, interest payable semi-annually at the rate of five per cent per annum; such bonds shall contain all necessary and usual provisions expressing the contract shall be signed by the Mayor and countersigned by the Treasurer of the city of Ada, Indian Territory, who shall keep a proper record of such bonds, that none of said bonds shall be sold at less than their par value; that the 8th day of October, A. D. 1906, be and the same is, designated and set apart as the day upon which the question of the issuance of the bonds hereinafter specified shall be voted upon by the qualified electors of said city of Ada, Indian Territory, who are owners of real or personal property subject to taxation in said city of Ada, Indian Territory, that it is further resolved that a notice of the said election be signed by the Mayor and Recorder of the city of Ada, Indian Territory; in their official capacity specifying time and places of holding said election and set forth this resolution; said notice to be published in the Ada Weekly News, a newspaper of general circulation published in said city of Ada, Indian Territory, for thirty days prior to said 8th day of October, A. D. 1906.

And be it further Resolved: That the election be held on said 8th day of October, A. D. 1906, between the hours of eight o'clock a. m. and sunset of the same day, at such place in each ward as shall be designated by the notice of said election published by the said Mayor and Recorder of the said City of Ada, Indian Territory; and said election be conducted by election officers, consisting of judges and clerks appointed by one of the judges of the United States District court in the Indian Territory within and for the Southern district thereof.

And be it further Resolved: That the electors of said City of Ada, Indian Territory, owning either real or personal property subject to taxation in said City of Ada, Indian Territory, shall vote at said election by ballot,

A Serious Altercation.

In Lewis' cold drinks resort on Main late Saturday afternoon, trouble arose between Dick Stebbins, the railroad contractor, and John Cleveland, the drayman, resulting in serious injury to the latter.

Eye witnesses of the assault, who were inclined to be communicative, were hard to find, but it is said that Cleveland approached Stebbins about a bill, whereupon the latter got sore and used some vile epithets. When Cleveland objected to the language Stebbins struck him a terrific blow about the eye with a bottle, crushing the bone. Cleveland fell unconscious and was carried home where he still lies prostrate and in great pain. Stebbins was soon arrested by the U. S. authorities on a charge of assault with intent to kill and placed under a $300 bond. Later he was arrested by the city authorities on a charge of assault and placed under a $100 bond for his appearance. He will have his trial Friday.

While there is some contrariety of rumors touching the origin of the difficulty the consensus of opinion seems to be that it was brutal, unjustifiable assault, one not likely to be committed by a man in full possession of his faculties. Cleveland is a one-arm man and after the difficulty the officers found no weapon on his person.

Campbell and Weaver Speak.

Saturday night in response to the invitation of W. H. L. Campbell, a fair audience gathered at the Opera house where they heard him deliver an address in behalf of his candidacy for delegate to the Constitutional Convention. Judge Campbell devoted most of his speech to the proper method of the removal of restrictions and the prohibition question.

He argued that Congress should remove restrictions so there would be a limitation on the amount of land which could be sold to any one individual. He next introduced for the first time the prohibition question into the delegate campaign.

Carlton Weaver, one of the candidates for delegate, who had accepted Mr. Campbell's invitation to be present followed Judge Campbell. He began by a discussion of his declaration of principles. Next he spoke fully and deliberately on the prohibition question. The News for want of space will not be able before the Tuesday issue to give the public the speeches in full of these two candidates.

ROLL OF EASTERN CHEROKEES.

Government Agent Will Prepare Roll For Distributing 5 Millions.

Muskogee, I. T., Sept. 17.—Some few days ago a committee representing the Keetoowah Society of the Cherokee Indians, composed of Richard M. Wolf, J. Frank Boudinot, Soggy Sanders and James Hildenbrandt, went to Washington for the purpose of inducing the Secretary of the Interior to send a man down to the Cherokee Nation to prepare a roll of the Eastern Cherokees who are entitled to participate in the $5,000,000 awarded them by the United States Court of Claims, instead of the Indians making application personally, setting out as a reason that many of the Indians would be deprived of getting the money they are justly entitled to on account of not knowing how to get the application blanks, which can only be secured at the Indian agency in this city, and again many of the full bloods have not the ready money to come to Muskogee.

J. Henry Dick of Tahlequah, who was in the city yesterday, received a message from Mr. Wolf, a member of the committee, who is also the head captain of the Keetoowah Society, to the effect that the secretary had agreed to furnish a man to prepare the roll and he was of the opinion that the work would begin at once.

In these days of rush and hurry courtesy is often forgotten. In the mad, pell mell rush of our life little things are done to offend that we had rather remained undone. A hastily eaten meal and its resultant headache may cause us social or financial loss. The wise man or woman is the one who relieves little ills of this sort by a little dose of Kodol for indigestion. It digests what you eat. Sold by F. Z. Holley and Crescent Drug Store.

HIS WIFE'S COUSIN

By A. B. FOX

"I'm very glad that I haven't a husband to worry about," said Anne Warner to her cousin, Amy. "You won't catch me entering the marriage state."

"But there are compensations," murmured Amy, tearfully. "Perhaps," replied Anne, dryly, "if you call having babies, and drubbing all day in the kitchen, trying to get up a meal that will please his lordship, and, then, just at the last moment have a cool little note handed you, saying, 'Sorry, but can't come home to dinner. Detained by business.'"

Amy winced. "He always has a good excuse," she faltered. Anne laughed scornfully. "Men always have. But just let me tell you, my dear cousin, it's all a lie. Why, last August, when Harry took me up on the roof garden of the Martine, what did I see? Dozens of well-dressed, good-looking men walking about with—well with—creatures. And the men seemed to be enjoying themselves immensely."

"But Jack wasn't there," put in Amy.

"These men have wives," went on Anne, mercilessly. "Sitting the summer out on the piazza of some farmhouse in the country, doing fancy work and criticising any or all of the guests who may be so unfortunate as to be absent. When this most interesting subject is exhausted, one or another, poor innocents, will be sure to say, with a sympathetic sigh, 'Poor Jack, or Tom or Dick, cooped up all day in that hot office in town, and then to go home to an empty house, without wife or child to cheer him up. I do hope he may manage to get up this Saturday for a little relaxation. But Jack doesn't come, this Saturday nor the next, and why? Because he is having the best kind of a time right here in town. Bah! It makes me sick.'"

Amy sighed, wiped her eyes once more, and tucked her handkerchief in the sleeve of her blouse.

"Well," she said, rising slowly, "we might as well eat our dinner. Oh, dear," with a regretful sigh, "and I made such a delicious chocolate pudding on purpose to please Jack. He's so fond of it."

For awhile, Anne sat in deep thought. Then she said, quite suddenly: "I've an idea, Amy. Shall I tell it you?" she paused and glanced a bit doubtfully at her cousin.

Amy nodded. "Go on," she said.

"Listen, then Jack consults his own pleasure in staying away from you. Now, suppose you take an outing yourself occasionally. Put on your most fetching gown, go somewhere and enjoy yourself. I will look after Anne."

Anne was Amy's only child, and Anne Warner's namesake. "How could I enjoy myself without Jack?" replied Amy, with a reproachful glance at her cousin. "Besides, what would he do if he should come home and not find me?"

"I'll wager he will manage to make himself comfortable," said Anne. "Besides, I will do my utmost to make things agreeable for his lordship. I fancy I've not lost quite all my powers of attraction yet," and Anne glanced complacently into the little mirror over the fireplace.

"Of course, I know that you can be, and are most charming, dear Anne," returned Amy, affectionately. "But then, you see, you are not his wife."

Anne laughed outright. "No, my dear innocent, I am not his wife, and that is just the reason why I can make it agreeable for him. When you return, you will see how devoted he will be to his own, own Amy."

Amy pressed Anne's hand gratefully for her seeming disinterested efforts for her welfare and happiness.

The next night, Jack Westcott was home promptly in time for dinner. "How would you like to go to the play to-night, Amy?" he said, in the midst of his enjoyment of a remarkably well-cooked ragout. "There's a capital thing going on at the Knickerbocker. Put on your prettiest gown and we will go."

Amy's face was radiant. She glanced triumphantly at her cousin. "How good of you Jack. I shall be delighted. Anne, you will go?"

Her cousin shook her head in decided negative.

Amy hastened to her room to dress, and Jack settled himself with a glass and the newspaper until she should be ready.

Anne sat down at the piano and struck a few chords. Then she began to sing softly. Jack laid down his paper to listen. "Do sing again," he pleaded, when she had finished. But Anne was deaf to his entreaties, and taking a seat at the table, occupied herself with some fancy work.

When Mrs. Westcott came down, looking quietly pretty, she found her husband and Anne deep in conversation, which must have been most enjoyable, judging from their bright, animated faces.

Jack arose reluctantly. "I declare," said he, "it is so cosy and homelike here, it seems almost a shame to leave." Then, seeing his wife's face fall perceptibly, hastened to add, "although, no doubt, we will enjoy the play when we get there. Good-night, coz, a pleasant evening to you."

A slow smile stole over Anne Warner's face, as she murmured softly,

"He would have preferred remaining here with me."

For three days Jack Westcott had not been home to dinner, nor, in fact, until everyone had retired. Amy was in despair.

On the morning of the fourth day Amy could bear it no longer.

"Why don't you say something, Anne," she said, miserably, as they were sitting over a late breakfast.

"I told you what to do," replied her cousin. "Pack your grip, and go off for a few days. Don't say anything to him about it. You made a good many friends while at school. Can't you drop in on one of them just for a couple of days?"

Amy's troubled countenance cleared visibly. "Why, yes, there's Kitty Waring. She is always begging me to go to her."

"Good! You can start directly after lunch."

"What, to-day?" asked Amy, a surprise.

"Of course. The sooner the better. If he comes home to-night, which I doubt, I will see that he is made entirely comfortable."

Jack Westcott came home late that night, just as Anne was preparing to go to her room. She met him in the hall.

"Amy has gone away for a few days," she informed him. "She has been feeling just a bit blue lately, and I advised her to have a change. She told me to tell you," and without giving him a chance to reply, she hurried up to her room and closed the door.

The next morning, after breakfast, as Jack was leaving the room, Amy called after him. "By the way, Cousin Jack, kindly tell me if you are coming to dinner to-night."

Jack looked surprised, as he replied. "Why, I really can't say. Anne—Amy never wanted to know."

"But see, Anne does," retorted Anne, smiling a little. "It is a great waste of time and trouble to prepare an elaborate meal when you are not here to enjoy it."

Jack met her glance and something in her eyes impelled him to say, "I will come."

Anne, smiling quietly, summoned the cook, to whom she gave orders for a particularly good dinner.

True to his word, Jack made his appearance promptly at six. After dinner he betook himself to the drawing room, where, after seeing her little namesake safely in bed, Anne joined him. As she entered, he arose, went to the piano and opened it.

"Let us have some music," said he. "I used to have rather a decent voice, but I fancy it's grown a bit rusty from disuse."

So the two played and sang together until the clock struck 12. They both started in surprise.

"How the evening has flown," observed Jack.

"Music always makes the time pass quickly," replied Anne, indifferently.

In closing the piano, the side of the case accidentally struck Anne's hand. Jack caught up the injured member and examined it carefully. There was a small red streak across the dimpled, white fingers. "Poor little hand," he exclaimed, and he laid his lips softly on the mark.

"Expect me at six," said Jack the next morning, on leaving the breakfast room to go to the office. "I shall look forward to another pleasant evening."

He caught her eye as he spoke, and the red surged slowly over his face. Turning quickly, he hurried from the room. Anne's smile to the empty air held something of triumph in it. "er," said she. "But tell me, how did Jack get on?"

"Very well, indeed. His appetite was exceedingly good, and I do not think he has lost an ounce of flesh."

"Don't tease me, Cousin Anne," pleaded Amy. "Do you really think he missed me?"

"He didn't say so. Ask him yourself when he comes home to-night to dinner."

"But will he come?" said Amy, doubtfully.

"He certainly will," assured Anne, with a peculiar smile.

At six o'clock Jack put in a prompt appearance. If disturbed at his wife's unexpected return, he made no sign, but greeted her most affectionately.

"Did you really miss me, Jack dear?" Amy asked, hanging over him adoringly.

Jack cast a quick glance at Anne, but she was busily looking over some new music.

"Of course, Amy. But, you know, you were a naughty girl to run away from your husband," replied Jack, jokingly.

Amy laughed and lovingly smoothed his hair. "It was a shabby trick to play you, wasn't it? I promised never to leave you again."

Mrs. Westcott was radiant all that. That afternoon, to Anne's surprise, Mrs. Westcott arrived.

"I couldn't stay away an hour long—evening, talking incessantly, and monopolizing Jack's attention. Anne sat at the piano, trying over her new music, striking chords softly and humming the airs to herself. It was not until Amy ran upstairs at a fancied call from Anne that the two had a word together.

Jack went over to the piano, leaned his arms on the case and looked down into Anne's face. "Our pleasant evenings are over," he said, regretfully.

She looked up and their eyes met. Yielding to the impelling passion in his, she arose and impulsively held out her hands. Seizing them he drew her within his arms, holding her as if he would never let her go. With his lips clinging to hers, for one delicious moment, the world was forgotten.

They started guiltily apart as Amy's step was heard coming down the stairs.

Notwithstanding Mr. Westcott now came home regularly at night, Amy was not exactly happy. She confided her feelings to her cousin.

"You are never satisfied, Amy," replied Anne, somewhat testily. "You fretted when he stayed away from you, and now that his evenings are always spent at home, still you are not happy."

"I suppose I am exacting," said Amy, humbly, "but he acts so strangely. I am really anxious about him. He will sit for hours, gazing at nothing, and the other day I was telling him something, and I know he did not hear a word I said. He just sat staring into space. Then last night, when you went out with Harry, he was as fidgety and absent-minded as possible. I offered to sing for him, but he said, no, he did not care for music, and only the other day I heard him tell you that he doted upon it. Do you think he can be ill or, perhaps he has business troubles? I think I will ask him, when he comes home to-night, what the trouble is. Do you think he will tell me, Anne? Or perhaps he might tell you. It would be almost the same thing. In the family, you know."

Thus appealed to, Anne turned from the window, but averted her face from her cousin's gaze, as she replied with an attempt at pleasantness: "Your better-half should tell his troubles to his wife, my dear, not to her cousin. She might not be interested."

Amy elevated her eyebrows. "What-ever can all Anne?" she said to herself. "She acts as queerly as Jack."

That afternoon Mrs. Westcott invited Anne to go with her on a shopping expedition. Anne refused, giving some trivial excuse. So Amy went alone. As she entered the hall on her return, she espied a folded note lying on the table. It was addressed to herself, in her cousin's handwriting.

"Cousin Amy—I have run away with your husband. I intended to do so from the first. You can never forgive me, so forget Anne."

Milt Dayton's Return

By J. B. BUTLER

They stood in the orchard under the old trees they loved so well. The air was laden with the scent of the apple blossoms and the moonlight streamed down through the white-laden boughs, making the scene a veritable paradise. It was the old, old story being enacted over again for the millionth time. The man was going away to seek the laurel wreath and the gold—and the girl was to await his return and then crown his success with her heart and hand. And, as ever, the man, full of the excitement of the fray and eager to go and try his steel against the great world, was hopeful, and eager, and strong, while the girl, with only weary days of waiting and inaction before her, was heartsick and tearful.

They had been so much to each other since earliest youth that the parting wrenched her heartstrings. The parting was hard for him, too, for he loved her dearly, and on this last night the memories of the tender hours they had passed crowded upon them both. He held her tight while her girlish arms were strained about his neck and her sweet face, with the limpid eyes and the passionate lips, was lifted to his.

"Can't we be happier to stay right here, Milt?" she whispered between his kisses. "You can get that 40 acres from Simpson by paying a little down and we can work hard and save and pay up and get more land after awhile."

The man laughed lightly, and somewhat scornfully.

"What!" he cried. "And live and die in this commonplace place and live and forever to save and save and save—just raise more corn to feed more hogs to buy more land, to raise more corn to feed more hogs, and so forth and so forth and so forth until they carry us to the cemetery, and all the time getting older and duller and more stupid. No, no, Sally, I'm going to aim higher. I've got the strength and health—and the brains, I reckon, and I'm going out to try for the big things. Somebody's going to get them, and I want to take a chance. And I'll win, Sally. I feel it in my bones; I'll win. And then I'll come back and lay it at your feet and you shall live like the lady you are, and I will live like a gentleman, and we both will get something out of life instead of being common drudges and clods all our lives."

The girl looked into the face of the young fellow, flushed with excitement, dominant with confidence, eyes sparkling with ambition and resolve, and she pressed him tighter as she said:

"Forgive me, Milt, forgive me; I am weak and selfish, I know. But I love you so, and I am so afraid something will happen to part us. I want you, Milt, more than I want riches or houses, or ease or success. I know I am wrong, but I am only a weak, inexperienced girl, you know. Go and do what you want to and remember always that my prayers are with you and that I am always here waiting for you—no matter what happens."

"You are the dearest and bravest girl in the world," he exclaimed, holding her close and smothering her with kisses, "and I will try to deserve you." Then he added: "But I must go. The train leaves at midnight."

The girl clung to him. "Remember, Milt, whatever happens, success or defeat, I am waiting for you." "Success or defeat you are waiting for me, he whispered. "That is enough to inspire any man. But there can be no defeat. I will wrest success from the world if hard work and persistence can do it."

"Good-by."

"Good-by."

A long, straining embrace, a shower of burning kisses, responded to most eagerly, and they parted, the girl to go home and weep the night away, the man to sigh and forget and plunge into the new world opening before him.

Ah! what a world it was, with its opportunities, its vicissitudes, its temptations, its hopes and fears and triumphs and falls. The same old world Father Adam tried to conquer—and all other men since, with what success ye students may judge yourselves.

Milton Dayton had his full share of all the ups and downs. His sturdy Americanism, undiluted at first by the shallowness and cynicism of city life, gave him a strength which he knew not of and carried him past many barriers and many obstacles. On the other hand, his ardent nature, his guttleness, his unpreparedness for contest with the unscrupulous worldlings of the city, led him into many humiliating defeats. And the sad part of it was that the lessons in worldliness which he learned lessened and weakened his great natural strength, because as he acquired worldly wisdom his ideals faded and his sturdy principles relaxed.

And so, although he had successes, he also had failures, and after five strenuous years he was forced to admit to himself that he was no nearer the goal of ambition than he was on the night he left Sally under the apple blossoms. Nay, not so near, for his ideals were shattered, his purpose weakened, his character sullied, and his hopes and ambitions perverted.

All this time he had been corresponding with the dear girl back at Weldon's Corners, and this correspondence had been the principal chain which had held him to his old scheme of life. One morning, as he was trying to recover his nerve after a debauch during which, besides shattering his nerves he had lost his position and spent all his money, his mind turned to the picture of the sweet girl under the apple trees with the fragrance of the blossoms all about.

"Fool! fool!" he cried bitterly to himself. "I have thrown away the substance for the shadow. I am more than a fool. I am a cur. I have kept her waiting while I have dallied away my time and talents."

Then he made a mighty resolve, and he wrote her in remorse and humility and contrition, telling her the whole truth—or as much of it as any man ever tells any woman—releasing her from her pledges and announcing that he started for South Africa on the following day to lose himself in the diamond fields—to win like a lion or lose like a jackal.

Five years later a gaunt, disheveled man stood on the dock in New York, wearing in his face an expression half way between happiness and desperation. Milton Dayton could not keep down the exultation he felt at breathing again the air of his native land, after five years of hardship and failure and disappointment in South Africa. On the other hand, he faced here the same problems he had faced in South Africa, and before he went there. His scanty store of money would last but a few weeks. He was over 30, had made a failure everywhere, was more or less broken in health and strength and wholly dispirited. To him came all the dreams and aspirations and confidence of his lost youth, and he cried aloud in bitterness. With all his strength and purpose—aye, and talent, for he had had talent, so everybody said—here he was, stranded in his early thirties—discouraged, broken and a quitter.

Then, like a mirage, came to him the scene in the old orchard ten years before. The smutty freight houses and the swearing roustabouts and the chugging tugs faded from his sight and hearing, and his postils were filled with the fragrance of apple blossoms, while, by the moonlight through the trees, he could see again the sweet face of his sweetheart with her fresh red lips upturned to his.

And in his ears, of a sudden, rang the words:

"Remember, Milt, whatever happens, success or defeat, I am waiting for you."

In a flash it came to him that he had missed the best goods the gods had offered him—that he had passed by the one great, unselfish, loyal, devoted love life had held or could hold for him.

He groaned aloud in anguish.

Through the fog of the Hudson came again, in tones as clear as a bell, the words:

"Whatever happens, success or defeat, I am waiting for you."

"Success or defeat—aye, that's the rub. Defeat—bitter, bitter defeat," cried Milton, striking himself in the face mirthlessly time and again. "And I went out so cock sure of success. And I broke my life, and hers, with my accursed folly."

Presently he went and sat down on a box. His old clearness of thought came back to him. Still in his ears rang the words "Whatever happens, success or defeat, I am waiting for you." To go back to her—that would be his salvation. Her great love and her strengthening hand would revivify his courage and strength and give him new purpose.

He shrank back abashed. "No, no," he said, "it would be a coward's act to go to her in defeat and ruin—besides I released her and deserted her five years ago—and God knows, she may be married."

"Remember, Milt, whatever happens, success or defeat, I am waiting for you," came out of the ether soft and clear, and he caught the very intoxication of her voice and the odor of the apple blossoms nearly suffocated him.

Slowly he arose and made his way to the depot.

They stood in the same orchard, under the same old trees, and the air was laden with apple blossoms as of yore. The same old moon also lightened the scene with its soft rays.

"Yes," he said, "I have come back—come back in defeat and humiliation. It's all my fault and I have nothing to ask of you—only I couldn't help coming to the old place once more—the only place where I ever have been happy."

The girl, now a woman in the very prime of glorious maturity, turned her calm eyes full on his.

"Do you remember what I said when you went away—Milt?"

He raised his eyes to hers and took a single step forward.

"Do I remember?" he said. "Whatever happens, success or defeat, I am waiting for you. Do I remember? But I forfeited all that five years ago."

"But I meant it—forever, Milt," and the calm eyes dropped and the face flushed rosy in the moonlight.

In an instant he had her in his arms and her arms were about his neck, and her face, upturned as it had been ten years ago, invited and received the same salute.
